A school for the education of 100 children of the freemen is chiefly supported by the corporation. This town is situated on the western branch of the river Swale, and consists of one principal street. The houses are modern, and near the centre of the town is a guild-hall. Here is a copperas manufactory, but the chief source of employment is fishing and oyster dredging, and the lobster trade, large quantities being imported from Sweden and Norway and sent to the London market. "This place, then called Cyning-burgh, was a residence of the Anglo-Saxon kings; their castle was near the entrance of the Swale, and afterwards received the name of the castle of Sheppey: in the reign of Edward III., it was entirely rebuilt, on a magnificent scale, from a plan by William of Wykeham, afterwards bishop of Winchester. That king, on visiting it for a few days, made the place a free borough, and in honour of his Queen Philippa, conferred its present name: in 1366, he incorporated it by charter, and three years afterwards gave it the staple of wool. The castle was repaired by Henry VIII., in 1536, at which time he erected several others for the defence of the coasts; but, on a survey made by order of parliament, in 1650, being found unserviceable as a fortress in modern warfare, it was soon afterwards demolished."—Lewis. RADNORSHIRE,

One of the six divisions of South Wales, extending from N. to S. 26 m., from E. to W. 31 m. It is bounded E. by Herefordshire, N. by Montgomery and Salop, S. and W. by Brecon and Cardiganshires.

Divisions.—It contains 1 borough, (New Radnor), 2 market-towns, (Presteigne and Knighton), and 6 hundreds, viz, Colwyn, Cefnly, Knighton, Painscastle, Radnor, and Rhayadyr.

Soil and Agriculture, &c.—The general aspect of this mountainous country is bleak and dreary, with the exception of the S.E. districts, which are comparatively level, and produce corn, wheat, barley, and oats in abundance, but the attention of the agriculturist is chiefly directed to the breed of sheep. The wool of Radnor is the staple produce of the country, and is always preferred in the English market.

Rivers.—This county is nearly environed by rivers. The Wye separates it from Brecon and Hereford. In the S. are the Arrow, Machawy, and Eddow. The central districts are watered by the Lug, Cwmarron, Cleweddag, and Ithon, and N. are the Elan, Infant Wye, and others of less note. The principal lakes are Llyn-Gwynne near Rhayadyr, Llynllanbychllyn in Llandilo-graban, and Glan-hilyn in Radnor Forest, all abounding in salmon, trout, and grayling.

Minerals.—The mineral productions are of little importance in this district of Wales. Lead has been found at Caer-Elan, copper in the neighbourhood of Llandrindod wells, and limestone underlays the surface generally. The want of coal is seriously felt, as it is attended with a difficulty of getting lime, so much needed in tillage.—This county is in the dio. of St David's and province of Canterbury. It sends one member to parliament, and confers the title of earl on the Bouvier family. Pop., in 1801, 19,050; in 1831, 24,651. A. P., £99,717.

The corporation consists of a bailiff, 25 capital burgesses, 2 aldermen, a recorder, coroner, and town-clerk. The bailiff holds a court every week. There are also petty sessions weekly, and quarter sessions alternately with Presteigne. It sends one member to parliament. The bailiff is the returning officer. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Radnor and dio. of St David's, rated at £13 10s. 10d. Patron, the lord-chancellor. Here is a place of worship for Dissenters. A fund is appropriated to the instruction of poor children, and to other charitable purposes. This town was originally of great importance, and defended by a strong castle, but was destroyed by Meredydd ap Owain during a contest with his nephew, who had been devastating South Wales. It now chiefly consists of one irregularly built street. The market is on Saturday. Fairs, October 28th, Tuesday before Holy Thursday, Trinity Tuesday, August 14th, and October 28th. Pop., in 1801, 329; in 1831, 472. A. P., £1,262.

RICHMOND, a village and parish in the first division of Kingston hundred, co. of Surrey, 10 m. W.S.W. from St Paul's, London. Its ancient name was Sheen, signifying (in the Saxon tongue) resplendent, from the beauty of its situation in the midst of a fertile and richly wooded plain. This lordship, or manor, which includes also Kew parish, has been a royal demesne since the time of Edward I., who resided here, as did several of his successors. The site of the royal palace is now occupied by private houses, held on lease from the crown. The custom of Borough-English prevails within the manor of Richmond, lands held by copy of court-roll descending to the youngest son, or in default of male issue, to the youngest daughter of the last tenant.—Living, a vicarage, consolidated with that of Kingston-on-Thames, in the archd. of Surrey and dio. of Winchester, rated at £20 6s. 3d. Patron, the King's college, Cambridge. The church—ded. to St Mary Magdalene—contains many very interesting monuments; among these is one to the memory of Thomson the poet, and one to Gilbert Wakefield. Here is a chapel-of-ease. Patron, the vicar of Kingston. Also a Roman Catholic chapel and four places of worship for Dissenters. A charity was founded in 1713 by voluntary contributions, and subsequently well-endowed. There are numerous establishments for the support and maintenance of the decayed and aged poor. This parish contains about 1200 acres, nearly half of which are comprised in the royal gardens of Kew, the remainder consists of pasture and garden ground. The pine-apple was first cultivated at Richmond. All the parochial affairs are regulated under a local act passed in 1785. Pop., in 1801, 4628; in 1831, 7243. A. P., £25,767.

RICHMOND, a prescriptive borough, market-town, and parish, in the W. division of Gilling wapentake, N. R. of Yorkshire, 48 m. N.W. from York, having separate jurisdiction. It was incorporated by Queen Elizabeth, and likewise received a charter from Charles II., under which the government is vested in a mayor, recorder, 12 aldermen, 24 common-councillors, a town-clerk, and other officers. The mayor and ex-mayor are justices of the peace; sessions for the borough are held in the town-hall quarterly, a court of record weekly, a court-leet for the manor at Easter and Michaelmas. This borough, with the parishes of Richmond and Easby, returns two members to parliament; the former electors were the burgage tenants. The present electors are about 350 in number. The mayor is the returning officer. The town consists of several streets, well-paved and lighted; the houses are neatly built of stone, and the market-place contains many handsome shops. The principal manufactures are those of paper, hair-cloth, oil-cloth, ropes, and twine. The chief trade is in corn. The market is on Saturday. Fairs, Saturday before Palm-Sunday, Saturday before the feast of St Thomas à Becket, and feast of Holy-Rood. Richmond gives title to an archdeaconry in the patronage of the bishop of Chester; and an ecclesiastical court is held here monthly. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester, rated at £15 5s. 7½d. Patron, the lord-chancellor. Church ded. to St Mary. There is also a chapel ded. to the Holy Trinity, the living of which is a perpetual curacy, returned at £70. Patron, the corporation of Richmond. Baptists, Wesleyans, and Roman Catholics, have chapels here. The free grammar school, founded and endowed by burgesses in the reign of Elizabeth, and placed by her letters patent under the management of the corporation, has about 18 scholars. There are also another free school under the control of this corporate body, a national school, and a school of industry. Among other charities are three almshouses for widows. Pop. of Richmond, in 1801, 2861; in 1831, 3900. A. P., £9,462.

The returning officer is the mayor. This was formerly a bishop's see, but now is a deanery, in the patronage of the lord-chancellor. Living, a perpetual curacy, and a peculiar of the archbishop of York. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Rippon. The church, ded. to St Peter and St Wilfred, is a spacious cruciform structure, and in the days of popery and superstition was celebrated for a passage leading in to a close vaulted room, so contrived that none but such as were favoured by the priest could pass through. There is another church, ded. to the Holy Trinity, built by the Rev. E. Kilvington. Here are likewise chapels for Independents and Primitive Methodists. The free grammar school was founded and liberally endowed by William and Mary. It is open to the sons of the inhabitants in general. Jephson's hospital—named after its founder—is for the support and education of 20 boys, sons of poor freemen. There are also national schools and various other charitable institutions. "Alchfrid, king of the Northumbers, gave this place first to Abbat Eata to build a monastery; but before that could be finished he was sent away, and St

Wilfrid made abbat here before A. D. 661. This religious house was endowed with great privileges by King Ethelstan, and continued in great repute till it was burnt down in the devastation which King Edred made in these parts about A. D. 950. Archbishop Oswald and his successors, archbishops of York, assisted in the rebuilding of the church, and Archbishop Aldred, about the time of the conquest, endowed it with lands, and made it collegiate, as it continues to this day. It was first ded. to St Peter, but in some later writings it is called the church of St Wilfrid. Herein were seven prebends, viz., Thorpe, valued, 26th Henry VIII., at £20 per annum; Stanwyke £40 Os. 8d.; Skelton and Yevenhale £15 10s. 4d.; Monkton £24 12s. 8d.; Sharrow £14 5s. 2d.; Stedley £26 11s. 4d.; Amwyke £321; and six vicars choral, each worth £6. The revenues of the community were valued at £35 8s. 8d., and the fabric lands at £13 12s. 7d. Upon the dissolution, the estates of this church came to the crown, and were granted into lay lands, and so continued all Queen Elizabeth's time. But King James I., at the request of his Queen, Anne, re-founded the same about A. D. 1604, adding a dean to the seven prebendaries, and endowed it with £247 per annum. The hospital of St Anne, of the foundation of a gentleman of the country thereby, is hard on the hither side of the Skelle. 'On the further ripe of the Skelle is the hospital of St John the Baptist, of the foundation of some of the archbishops of York,' before the fourth year of King John. It had revenues valued, 26th Henry VIII., at £10 14s. 4d. per annum, according to Dagdale; and, 37th Henry VIII., at £12 Os. 4d., as Stevens, and is yet in being.—'The hospital of St Mary Magdalene for lepers here is on the hither ripe of the Skelle, and is of the foundation of the archbishops of York.' It was founded by Archbishop Thurstan, who died A. D. 1139, first for a chaplain and sisters, and for the relief of all the lepers of Ripponshire. Afterwards here was a master, two or three chaplains, and some brethren. It was valued, 26th Henry VIII., at £27 6s. 6d. in toto, and at £24 Os. 7d. clara.—Tanner's Not. Mon. The town of Rippon is well paved and lighted, but the streets are narrow and irregular. The market-place is very spacious. The town-hall is a handsome freestone edifice. A theatre, erected in 1792, has been converted into a riding school. Near the town is a fine stone bridge crossing the river Ure, which has been made navigable to Rippon by act of parliament. Barges of from 20 to 35 tons burden bring coal and merchandise to this town, from Hull, York, &c., receiving, in return, lead, butter, and other produce. Linen is manufactured to a considerable extent, and a weekly sale of wool takes place here during the season, which is attended by dealers from Leeds and other manufacturing towns. The provision market is on Thursday. Fairs, 1st Thursday after 20 days from Old Christmas day, May 13th and 14th, 1st Thursday and Friday in June, Thursday after August 2d, 1st Thurs-

ROCHESTER,

An ancient city and sea-port, with separate jurisdiction, but located in Aylesford lathe, co. of Kent, 8½ m. N. from Maidstone, and 29 m. E. by S from London.

Ecclesiastical Affairs.—The bishopric of Rochester is the smallest, and, excepting Canterbury, the most ancient see in the kingdom, comprehending no more than 91 parishes in the deaneries of Rochester, Malling, and Dartford, consisting of that part of Kent, W. of the river Medway. The bishopric is rated at £358 14s.: the deanery is not in charge; both are in the patronage of the king. The archd. is rated at £34 14s. 9d. Patron, the bishop. The city comprises the parishes of St Margaret and St Nicholas. The former a vicarage, rated at £10. Patron, the dean and chapter. The latter a vicarage with that of St Clements, rated at £20 8s. 9d. Patron, the bishop of Rochester; both in the archd. and dio. of Rochester. There are places of worship for Independents, Wesleyans, Quakers, and Unitarians. "About A. D. 600, King Ethelbert began to build a church here to the honour of St Andrew, and therein, when finished, about four years after, placed a bishop and a chapter of secular priests, who being reduced to four or five, and obliged to resign, Bishop Gundulf, A. D. 1089, settled in this cathedral fifty or sixty Black monks. The bishopric was valued, 26th Henry VIII., at £444 4s. 2d. per annum in the whole, and at £411 0s. 11d. clear; and the priory was then valued at £486 11s. 5d. per annum, as Dugd. and Speed. But the priory being dissolved at the general suppression of the greater monasteries, King Henry VIII. brought in again a dean and six secular canons or prebendaries, six minor canons, with a dean and subdeacon, six lay-clerks, eight choristers, &c. In the reign of King Edward II., Symond Potyn, a man of no small account, who had several times represented this city in parliament, by his will, dated A. D. 1316, bequeathed a certain house for an hospital, to be called the Spital of St Catharine of Rochester in the suburb of Eastgate, for such poor men of that city, lepers, or otherwise diseased, impotent and poor, to be received therein, and there to abide on the alms of charitable people. This hospital escaped dissolution at the Reformation, and has since been augmented by subsequent donations to the yearly value of £500."—Tanner's Not. Mon.

Schools.—The royal free school, founded by Henry VIII., for 20 boys, is superintended by the dean and chapter. The scholars are eligible to certain exhibitions at either of the universities. There is another free school founded and endowed in 1701 by Sir J. Williamson. A hundred boys receive a classical education at this establishment. Besides other endowed charity schools, there are several national and Sunday schools.

Buildings.—The venerable cathedral of Rochester is in the form of a double cross, and consists of a nave, choir, two transepts, and several chapels, with a central tower surmounted by a spire. The whole length of the building is 306 feet, the extreme breadth 122 feet. The western front has a magnificent Norman door-way, over which is a large window of later date than the building itself. The choir is a fine specimen of the early English style. Over the altar is a painting, by West, of the angels appearing to the shepherds to announce the birth of Christ. Beneath the choir is a crypt, or subterranean chapel; and near the eastern transept is a building called Gundulph's tower. The chapter-house is in ruins.—The town-hall is a handsome structure, supported by Doric columns. The open area serves as a market-place; and behind it is the city gaol.—The clock-house was erected in 1706 by Sir Cloudeley Shovel.—There is a neat theatre, and a large and commodious poor-house.—A literary and philosophical institution is established.—Here are the remains of a castle, erected after the conquest; this relic consists principally of the keep, a quadrangular building 104 feet in height, and 70 feet in extent at the base, with walls 12 feet in thickness.

Municipal Government.—This city was first incorporated by Henry II., and is now governed by charter of Charles II., which vests the civil power in a mayor, recorder, 11 aldermen, 12 common-councillmen, town-clerk, two chamberlains, water-bailiff, and inferior officers. Courts of session are held quarterly, a court of portmote once a fortnight, and a court of requests. The corporation have jurisdiction over the oyster fisheries in the creeks and inlets of the river Medway. Rochester sends two representatives to parliament. The number of electors is about 2000. The mayor is the returning officer.

Trade.—The commercial prosperity of this city is greatly advanced by its contiguity to the Medway, and the dock-yard and victualling office at Chatham. Ship-building is carried on, and the oyster fishery is very considerable. The average number of vessels entering this port annually has been estimated at 320 foreign and 120 British. The weekly markets are abundantly supplied with fish and provisions. A corn market has recently been established, and a cattle market, monthly. Fairs, May 30th and Dec. 11th. Pop., in 1801, 6645; in 1831, 9891.

ROCHFORD, a market-town and parish in the above hundred and co., 16½ m. S.E. from Chelmsford, situated on a small rivulet called the Broomhill, crossed by two wooden bridges. The trade is chiefly in corn. Market on Thursday. Fairs, Easter-Tuesday and Wednesday after Sept. 29th. This place is celebrated in ancient records for what is termed the lawless court, held at twilight on the Wednesday morning after Michaelmas-day, in the open air, at a place called King's-hill, where all the business is transacted in whispers, and coal used instead of pen and ink; those tenants who neglect to appear, forfeit double rent. The origin of this singular custom is uncertain.—Living, a rectory in the archd. of Essex and

ROLLS-LIBERTY, in Holborn division of Ossulston hundred, co. of Middlesex, ¾ m. W.N.W. from St Paul's, London.—“In the then suburbs of London, on the east side of New-street (now called Chancery-lane), King Hen. III., A.D. 1231, began a religious foundation for the instruction and maintenance of all such Jews as should be converted to the Christian faith; which he endowed with a yearly pension of seven hundred marks, to be paid out of the exchequer till he should provide better: and King Edward I. gave the deadlands all over England to the same good use. This house was under the government of a master and two or three chaplains. It had a church within the precinct, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, which is now called the chapel of the rolls, as being used for the custody of the rolls and records in chancery; for, after the expulsion of the Jews, the number of converts dwindled away, and in the year 1377 the mastership of this house was annexed by patent to the office of the keeper of the rolls of chancery, who is since called the master of the rolls.”—Tanner's Not. ROMNEY (NEW), a cinque-port, market-town, and parish, located partly in the liberty of Romney-marsh, and partly in the lower half hundred of St Martin's-Pountney, co. of Kent, 37 m. S.E. from Maidstone. This place has for many years been inconsiderable as a sea-port, its fine haven having been destroyed by an irruption of the sea. It is a borough by prescription, and governed by a mayor, 12 jurats, a chamberlain, recorder, town-clerk, and subordinate officers. Until the passing of the reform act New Romney, with its 80 voters, enjoyed the privilege of returning two representatives to parliament. It has now taken its place, with its disfranchised fellows, in schedule A.—The town, which consists of several streets, is situated on rising ground near Romney-marsh. The houses are chiefly of brick; the town-hall and market-place are of recent erection. The principal trade is in grazing cattle on Romney-marsh. The market is on Thursday. Fairs, August 26th.—Living, a vicarage with the curacies of St Lawrence and St Martin, in the dio. of Canterbury, exempt from visitation, rated at £6 16s. 3d. Patron, All Souls college, Oxford. The church—ded. to St Nicholas—is a noble specimen of Norman architecture, containing several curious relics of antiquity.—“The church of St Nicholas, with the chapel annexed, and some other churches in Kent, being appropriated to the abbey of Pountney in —, here was placed a cell of monks to that foreign abbey, and upon the suppression of these alien priories it was given by King Hen. VI. to All Souls college, in Oxford.”—Tanner's Not. Mon. Pop., in 1801, 755; in 1831, 983. A. P., £8,740.

Patron, Earl Craven. The church—ded. to St Andrew—is a venerable structure, with a square tower. Here are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyans.—This place was anciently called Rocheberle, and is thought to have been one of the numerous fortresses which King Stephen authorised his nobles to erect in different parts of the kingdom. It owes its present celebrity to its magnificent public school, founded by Laurence Sheriffe, citizen of London, in the 9th of Elizabeth's reign. The management is vested in 12 trustees, and the school is under the direction of a head master and six classical assistants. The number of boys on the foundation is 40, and by a late regulation the number of those not on the foundation is restricted to 260. Belonging to this noble establishment are 21 exhibitions and several fellowships in either university. The present edifice was erected in 1806, and forms an elegant range of building in the Tudor style. The chapel is detached, and fitted up like the choir of a cathedral; near the altar is a splendid monument by Chantrey, exhibiting the figure of Dr James, late head master. In connection with this school are almshouses for 12 poor men. A charity school for 30 boys and girls was founded in 1707 by Mr Elborough, who also founded and endowed almshouses for six aged widows. RUTLANDSHIRE,

The smallest co. in England, is bounded N. W. and S.W. by Leicestershire, S. and S.E. by Northamptonshire, E. and N.E. by Lincolnshire. It extends from N. to S. 17 m., from E. to W. 14 m., measures 58 m. in circumference, and is divided into five hundreds, viz., Alstoe, East, Martinsley, Oakhampske, and Wrاندike, and contains two market-towns, Oakham, and Uppingham, and 50 parishes.

Face of the Country.—The general appearance of this county is interesting, and beautifully varied by hill and dale. The rising grounds are in the direction of E. and W., with valleys intervening.

Soil and Agriculture.—In the E. and S.E. there is a clay soil of shallow staple, upon limestone rock; the other parts are of a strong red loam. The former is well adapted to the growth of turnips, barley, clover, wheat, and other green crops. The average crop of wheat is 22 bushels and 3 quarters per acre; of barley, 32; of oats, 42 bushels and ½; of peas, 24 and ½; of beans, 23 and ½. There are nearly 45,000 acres of grass land, producing from a ton to a ton and a half per acre; one half of which land is used to feed and store cattle. The management of grazing land is well understood here. The cattle reared are of no particular breed; those most in request are the Irish and small Scotch. The sheep are chiefly the polled, long-woolled kind. The horses are strong but ill shaped.

Rivers.—The principal river is the Welland; the smaller streams are the Wash, the Chater, and the Little Eye. The only line of navigation which this county possesses, is its connection with the Melton-Mowbray canal which enters from Leicestershire.

Roads.—The great North road from London to Edinburgh enters the co. a little N. of Stamford, and passes eastward. The Leeds mail-road enters from Kettering in Northamptonshire, and passes through Uppingham and Oakham to Melton-Mowbray in Leicestershire.

Ecclesiastical and Civil Affairs.—With the exception of Ketton, Empringham, and Liddington parishes, this county lies within the dio. of Peterborough, and is in the province of Canterbury, and forms a deanery in the archd. of Northampton. It is included in the Midland circuit. The assizes and quarter sessions are held at Oakham, (the county-town;) the acting magistrates are seven in number. Two

S.E. by E. from London, occupies the declivity of a hill on a peninsula bounded by the sea on the S.W., and by the river Rother on the E.; it consists of several well-formed streets, and is well-paved and lighted. The prescriptive corporation includes a mayor, bailiff, 12 jurats, and commonalty. The mayor and jurats are justices of the peace, and hold courts of session regularly, and a court of record once a fortnight for recovery of debts to any amount. The elective franchise was exercised by this borough at a very early period. Until the passing of the reform act it sent two members to parliament; it now returns only one. The electors are about 300 in number. The mayor is the returning officer.—This is not one of the original cinque-ports, but, together with Winchelsea, was annexed to them in the reign of Henry III. In the reign of Edward III. an inundation of the sea having formed a natural harbour, the town soon became a considerable port, and continued progressing until, in the reign of Elizabeth, it was a place of very great importance. The harbour, which flows up the town, receives the rivers Fillingham, Brede, and Rother, which, in the course through the interior of the country, afford valuable commercial advantages. Vessels of 200 tons burden can come to the quay with great ease.—The trade of this town is chiefly in hops, corn, coal, bark, wool, and timber. The herring and mackerel fisheries are extensive. The markets are on Wednesday and Saturday. There is likewise a large cattle market every alternate Wednesday. Fairs, Whit-Monday and August 10th.—Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Lewes and dio. of Chichester, rated at £43 13s. 4d. Patron, Lord G. H. Cavendish. The church—ded. to St Mary—is a spacious stone edifice, with a central tower, containing a clock of singular construction. Here are places of worship for Independents, Baptists, and Wesleyan Methodists. Two well-endowed free schools are, by a decree of chancery, to be conducted under one master. Pop., in 1801, 2187; in 1831, 3715. A. P., £7,230.

RYLE (GREAT), a township in Whittingham parish, co. of Northumberland, 8½ m. W. by S. from Alnwick. Pop., in 1801, 111; in 1831, 94.

RYLE (LITTLE), a township in Whittingham parish, co. of Northumberland, 8½ m. W. from Alnwick. Pop., in 1801, 50; in 1831, 40.

RYME-INTRINSICA, a parish in the liberty of the same name, Sherborne division, co. of Dorset, 6½ m. S.W. from Sherborne. Living, a discharged rectory with Hermitage vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the dean of Salisbury, rated at £6 5s. 8d. Here was anciently a royal palace and park; the site of the former is called Court-hill, and commands a fine view over the boundary of the latter, which is still distinguishable. Pop., in 1801, 123; in 1831, 171. A. P., £1,623.

RYTHER, a parish partly in the upper, but chiefly in the lower division of Barkstone wapentake, W. R. of Yorkshire, 6½ m. N.W. by N. from Selby. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of York, rated at £6 11s. 0½d. Patron, the lord-chancellor. Church ded. to All Saints. Pop., in 1801, 299; in 1831, 361. A. P., £3,716.

RYTON, a parish in the west division of Chester ward, co.-palatine of Durham, comprising the townships of Chopwell, Crawcrook, Ryton, Ryton-Woodside, Steila, and Winlaton. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Durham, rated at £42 10s. 10d. Patron, the bishop. There are two Methodist chapels in the parish, a subscription school, and a subscription library. Coal and iron abound in this neighbourhood; and there are some extensive iron-works. The petty-sessions for the division are held here on the first Monday of every month; and a statute fair for hiring servants takes place twice a-year, in May and November. The village of Ryten figures in border history. The Scots reduced it to ashes in 1297. Pop., in 1801, 5323; in 1831, 6568. A. P., £22,364. Pop. of the township of Ryten, in 1831, 590.

RYTON, a parish in the Shifhall division of the hundred of Brimstree, co. of Salop, 4 m. S. by E. from Shifhall. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, rated at £5 12s. 1d. Patron, G. Molyneux, Esq. Pop., in 1801, 160; in 1831, 164. A. P., £1,483.

RYTON, a hamlet in the parish of Bulkington, hundred of Knightlow, co. of Warwick. Pop., in 1831, 346; in 1831, with the parish.

RYTON (or RYTON)-UPON-DUNSMOOR, a parish in the Rugby division of the hundred of Knightlow. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Coventry and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, rated at £11 6s. 8d. Church ded. to St Leonard. Patron, the prebendary of Ryten in Lichfield cathedral. Pop., in 1801, 324; in 1831, 510. A. P., £2,879.

RYTON, a township in the parish of Kirkby-Misperton, N. R. of Yorkshire, 3 m. N. from New Malton. Pop., in 1831, 222.

RYTON-WOODSIDE, a township in the parish of Ryton, west division of Chester ward, co.-palatine of Durham, 8½ m. W. from Gateshead. A dreadful explosion of fire-damp, by which 37 people lost their lives, occurred in one of the collieries here in 1826.

SADBRIDGEWORTH, or SAWERIDGEWORTH, a parish in the hundred of Broughin, co. of Hertford. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Middlesex and dio. of London, rated at £17. Church ded. to St Michael. Patron, the bishop of London. Here are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyan Methodists. Distances from Hereford, 11½ m. E.N.E. Pop., in 1801, 1687; in 1831, 2231. A. P., £9,194.

SACOMB, a parish in the hundred of Broadwater, co. of Hertford. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Huntingdon and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £10 3s. 4d. Church ded. to St Mary. Patron, in 1829, Samuel Smith, Esq. There is here a small bequest for the benefit of one poor child. Distance from Ware, 4 m. N.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 255; in 1831, 360. A. P. £1,663.

SADBERGE, a chapelry in the parish of Haughton-le-Skerne, co.-palatine of Durham. Living, a curacy to the rectory of Haughton-le-Skerne, in the archd. and dio. of Durham. Chapel ded. to St Andrew. Patron, the rector of Haughton-le-Skerne. Anciently this place formed a distinct county, having its gaol, its sheriff, coroner, and other officers. The county pinfold, to which stray cattle are sometimes brought from distant parts of the county, is all that now remains of its former privileges. Here is a chapel belonging to the Wesleyan Methodists. Distance from Darlington, 4 m. E.N.E. Pop., in 1801, 391; in 1831, 403. A. P., £3,487.

SALEHURST, a parish in the hundred of Henhurst, rape of Hastings, co. of Sussex. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Lewes and dio. of Chichester, rated at £14. Church ded. to St Mary. Patron, in 1829, S. B. P. Micklethwaite, Esq. Here is a free school, endowed with lands that in 1786 were worth £45 per annum. It is to the disgrace of the country, especially of its government, that like most establishments of the kind, the benevolent intentions of the donor, with regard to this bequest, have not been fulfilled, nor have even his directions been complied with. To wrest out of the base and partial managements into which so many of these valuable bequests have fallen, and restore them to a free and healthful operation, were an achievement worthy of the noblest honours, and a boon to the lower orders of the first magnitude. Distance from Robert's-bridge, 1 m. N.E. Pop., in 1801, 1611; in 1831, 2204. A. P., £6,523.

SALFORD, a newly enfranchised borough, market-town, chapelry, and township, in the parish of Manchester, to which it adjoins on the W. bank of the Irwell, which encircles it on all sides except the W., where it joins Pendleton.—This town gave name to the hundred at a very early era. Its churches, chapels, public buildings, and historical events, have already been described under the head of MANCHESTER. The courts and prisons for the hundred are established here. The manor of Salford is in possession of the crown, but was once a fee of the earls of Chester. Ordall-hall, an old house of the Radcliffes, is in this township. Here are several very large breweries. In December, 1831, the right of electing a member of the senate, was given to Salford along with Pendleton and Broughton; returning officer the boroughreeve of Salford for the time being. At the first election the number of polled votes was 1230. See MANCHESTER.

SALFORD, a parish in the hundred of Chadlington, co. of Oxford. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Oxford, rated at £9 11s. 3d. Church ded. to St Mary. Patron, in 1829, the Rev. R. S. Skillicome. Distance from Chipping-Norton, 2 m. W.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 225; in 1831, 341. A. P., £2,573.

SALISBURY

A city, having separate jurisdiction, locally situated in the hundred of Underditch, co. of Wilts. It comprises the parishes of St Edmund's, a rectory, not in charge, returned at £115. Patron, the bishop of Salisbury.—St Martin's, a discharged rectory, rated at £11 3s. 1½d., returned at £55. Patron, William Wadham, Esq.—St Thomas's, a curacy, returned at £80. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Salisbury.

General Description.—The city is happily and delightfully situated on a neck of land formed by the confluence of the Bourne with the Upper Avon, over the latter of which it has two stone-bridges of 6 arches each, by which it communicates with the suburb of Fisherton-Anger on the north-west, and a very ancient one of 10 arches, on which formerly stood a chapel ded. to St John, by which it communicates with East Hurnham on the south-west. The streets are spacious, and intersecting each other at right angles, divides the town into squares, here called chequers, round which the houses are built fronting outward, the areas within being laid out in gardens. The water of the Avon is carried through most of the streets in open canals lined with brick, which contributes greatly to the cleanliness and the health of the inhabitants. Antiquated buildings are still to be seen with gabled parts of timber-work and plaster, but the houses are in general modern, and though composed of brick, well built. The market-place is a spacious square, at the south-east angle of which stands the council-house, a very fine structure, commenced in 1788, and completed in 1795, at the expense of the late earl of Radnor. It is built of white brick, with rustic stone quoins and cornices, and ornamented in part with a receding Doric portico, on the entablature of which is an inscription commemorating the founder. In the right wing of this building are the council-chamber and other apartments for the use of the corporation; in the left wing are the court-rooms in which are held the city-sessions, the county-sessions, and assizes, &c. The Poultry-cross, probably built in the reign of Edward III., stands in the south-west angle of the market-place, but considerably injured by the hand of time. The county-gaol and bridewell, including a chapel and two infirmaries, stand at Fisherton-Anger. They were built in 1818, at an expense of £30,000. There is a small theatre in New-street, which is occupied some months during the winter season. In the market-place is a library, reading-room, and museum, supported by subscription. The environs are very fine, containing—in addition to numerous elegant villas—the richly ornamented seat of Wadham Wyndham, Esq. on the north-east of the town, and on the bank of the Avon, Longford-castle, the magnificent seat of the earl of Radnor.

Manufactures, &c.—The manufactures of flannels, druggets, and Salisbury whites—once so extensively carried on here—are now nearly extinct; but for the superior quality of its select articles of cutlery, the town is still celebrated. From the high prices, however, the sales are greatly circumscribed. The commerce of the place is limited to such articles as are necessary for the supply of the city and its immediate vicinity. The market-days are Tuesday and Saturday. The former chiefly for corn, the latter for cheese, with provisions of every description. A large cattle-market is held every alternate Tuesday. Fairs are held the first Tuesday after January 6th for cattle, Tuesday after March 25th for cloth, Whit Monday and Tuesday for horses and pedlery, and October 20th for butter and cheese. Races are held in the vicinity annually, in the month of August.

Municipal Government.—The government is vested in a mayor, a high steward, a recorder, deputy recorder, twenty-four aldermen, thirty common-councilmen, with a town-clerk, &c. The mayor is elected annually, by the corporation in general. The high steward and recorder, who are usually noblemen, hold their places for life. The mayor, ex-mayor, recorder, deputy recorder, and ten of the aldermen are justices of the peace for the city, having authority to hold courts of session quarterly for the trial of all offenders;—capital cases, however, they usually transfer to the county-assizes. The Close, solely ecclesiastical property, surrounded by a wall, and inhabited by the clergy and other gentlemen connected with the cathedral, is a corporation by itself under the jurisdiction of the bishop, the recorder, and the canons residentiary, who are magistrates. A bailiff, and deputy bailiff, are appointed by the bishop, who have authority to hold monthly courts of record for the recovery of debts to any amount within the city as well as the Close. They likewise hold courts-leet under the bishop as lord of the manor. The county-assizes and the spring quarter-sessions are held here. The city sends two members to parliament. The mayor is the returning officer. The electors are about 700 in number.

See, Cathedral, &c.—Salisbury is the seat of an episcopal see originally settled at Sherborne in Dorsetshire, by Ina the Saxon, in the year 704, his kinsman Aldhelm being appointed the first bishop. After having continued at Sherborne nearly three centuries, it was removed first to Wilton and afterwards to Old Sarum, where within the castle a cathedral church was founded by bishop Herman, finished, endowed, and consecrated to the honour of the Blessed Virgin Mary, by his successor Bishop Osmond, 1092. Here the bishops and their retinues do not seem to have felt themselves altogether so comfortable as churchmen have in all ages aspired to be. "It was a place," says an old author who seems to have been an inmate, "exposed to the wind, barren, dry, and solitary—a tower was there, as in Siloam, by which the inhabitants were for a long time enslaved." He adds that "the church of Salisbury was a captive on that hill; let us then," he continues, "in God's name go down into the level; there the vallies will yield plenty of corn, and the champaign fields are of a rich soil." King Stephen, having quarrelled with Bishop Roger, placed a garrison in the castle which was considered a gross violation of the liberties of the church. The soldiers, too, not only levied contributions upon the priests, but insulted them in the exercise of their devotions. Bishop Poor, in consequence, obtained a papal bull, under which he removed the see to Salisbury, 1217, and "that they might begin at the house of God," Camden observes, "Richard Poor, the bishop, in a pleasant meadow before called Merifield, laid the foundation of the great church, a stately pile of building, the which with its high steeple and double cross isles, by its venerable grandeur strikes its spectators with a sacred joy, and was in 43 years' space finished at a great expence, and dedicated, A. D. 1258, in the presence of King Henry III. This splendid cathedral has been celebrated in Latin verses by the learned Daniel Rogers, of which Dr Heylin has given the following translation.

"How many days in one whole year there be,
So many windows in our church we see
So many marble pillars there appear,
As there are hours throughout the fleeting year.
So many gates as moons one year does view,
Strange tales to tell, yet not so strange as true.

Like the former, at Old Sarum, this cathedral was dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, and is of so rich a character, that it would require a volume to describe its parts and enumerate its beauties. By the best judges it has been pronounced one of the purest and noblest specimens of the early Gothic or pointed style of architecture. It is built in the form of a double cross, with a highly enriched tower and lofty spire, rising from the intersection of the nave and larger transepts to the height of 410 feet from the pavement, being the highest in England. The east window is filled with painted glass, being a representation of the resurrection, from a design by Sir Joshua Reynolds. The elevation of the brazen serpent in the wilderness, designed by Mortimer, occupies one of the windows of the choir, and less ambitious subjects decorate several others. The see includes the counties of Berks and Wilts. The establishment comprises the bishop, dean, precentor, chancellor, treasurer, six canons residentiary—who are at the same time prebendaries—three archdeacons—Berks, Sarum, and Wilts—a subdean, a succentor, 38 prebendaries, four priest-vicars, six singing men, eight choristers, an organist, &c. &c.

Besides the established churches, there are here places of worship for Baptists, Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, Roman Catholics, and Unitarians. In the Close is a grammar school for the choristers. In this school the celebrated Joseph Addison received the rudiments of his education. The city grammar school was founded by Queen Elizabeth, and is under the control of the corporation. A school for eight orphan females was founded by the Godolphin family, and one for 20 boys and 20 girls, who are clothed at the same time that they are educated, is supported by the bishop. A national, and several Sabbath schools are supported by subscription. Among the numerous charitable institutions, the principal are the college of Matrons, founded by Dr Seth Ward, one of the bishops of Salisbury, for the support of ten clergymen's widows. The original endowment, which has since been largely augmented, was £200 per annum.—Harnham hospital, founded by Bishop Poor, the founder of the cathedral, for a master and 12 brethren and sisters.—Trinity hospital, founded in the reign of Richard II., for 12 aged brethren.—To these may be added Brichet's hospital for six aged widows, each of whom receives 3s. 6d. weekly.—Eyre's hospital for six men and their wives, who also receive 3s. 6d. per week.—Frowd's hospital for six aged men and six women, who receive each 4s. 6d. per week.—Taylor's hospital for six aged members, who have each 3s. 6d. per week, and Blechynden's hospital for six aged women, who have each 2s. 6d. per week.—An infirmary for the sick and maimed is liberally supported, chiefly by subscription.—Of the Franciscan and Dominican convents, once established here, not the smallest vestige remains. Henry Lawes, still remembered for his compositions in music; John Greenhill, portrait painter; Chubb, a noted infidel; and James Harris, author of Hermes, &c., are among the distinguished natives of Salisbury. Distance from London, 83 m. S.W. by W. Pop., in 1801, 7668; in 1831, 9876. A. P., £18,266.

SALISBURY PLAIN, an extensive level tract, running across the co. of Wilts from E. to W. past Amesbury to the northward of Salisbury, also an extensive tract of downs south of that city. In the ancient and extensive signification of the name, the country round Salisbury in general is included, comprehending both the tracts above named, and extending eastward into Hampshire, and westward into Dorsetshire, a length from E. to W. of 50 m., and from N. to S., in some places, from 35 to 40 m. in breadth. Large portions of this vast territory are still unenclosed, and occupied entirely as sheep walks, but much of it is also under tillage, producing luxurious crops, and many populous villages are scattered over it. The soil is naturally fertile, producing, even in its wild state, the finest grasses, and affording for sheep the most nutritious pasturage. In the most dreary part of this plain, about six miles north of Salisbury, is situated Stonehenge, an ancient monument, for which see AMESBURY.

SALKELD (GREAT), a parish in Leath ward, co. of Cumberland. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Carlisle, rated at £22 10s. 10d. Church ded. to St Cuthbert. Patron, the bishop of Carlisle. In this parish are some beautiful landscapes, enlivened and sublimed by the Eden, over which there is here a bridge of singular construction. There are also the remains of an ancient encampment, and a chalybeate spring. The Primitive Methodists and the Presbyterians have here places of worship. Distance from Kirk-Oswald, 8 m. S.W. Pop., in 1801, 285; in 1831, 447. A. P., £1,909.

SALOP,

An inland county, bounded on the N. by the counties of Chester, Flint, and Denbigh, on the E. by the county of Stafford, on the S. and S.E. by the counties of Hereford and Worcester, and on the W. by those of Montgomery and Denbigh. Its form is an irregular parallelogram. Its extreme length being from N. to S. upwards of 40 m., and its extreme breadth from E. to W. about 33 m. Its contents have been estimated at 858,240 acres, or about a forty-fifth part of England and Wales.

Physical Features, &c.—The aspect of this county is highly diversified, affording every variety of landscape from the bleak and barren heath to the widely extended valley glowing with the riches of a careful and skilful cultivation, and from the craggy mountain frowning in naked sublimity from among the clouds, to the richly wooded declivity sheltering the secluded glen, and shading the hermit stream. The principal hills are the Wreken, Acton, Burnell, Frodesley, Lawley, Caer, Caradoc, Hope, Bowdler, Clee, and Longmynd hills. Rising abruptly from the great plain of Salop, which extends nearly the whole length of the county, and being separated generally by narrow valleys, they have a peculiarly striking appearance, while, from their craggy summits, elevated between 2 and 3000 feet above the plain, the most admirable views are obtained.

Rivers.—The principal river is the Severn, which near its junction with the Wirenew from the north-west, enters this county a little below Welshpool, Montgomeryshire, and by a winding east-south-easterly course of upwards of 60 m., in the whole of which it is navigable, divides it nearly into two equal parts. From the east it receives the united streams of the Tern and the Rodon, and from the west several smaller streams. The north-west corner of the county is washed by the Dee. The Teme waters its southern border, and receives a number of considerable streams, of which the principal are the Camlet, the Clun, the Oney, and the Corve, swollen with the waters of which it falls into the Severn below Worcester. The Teme is celebrated for grayling and trout, and the Severn within the county yields salmon, flounders, pike, trout, grayling, perch, eels, shad, bleak, gudgeons, chub, roach, dace in great abundance, carp, lampreys, and ruff. The fishermen here use a kind of canoe made of osiers covered with hides, which they work with a paddle. It is so light, that on quitting the river the fisherman carries it home upon his back with the one end over his head as if it were a large basket. There are a number of lakes, or, as they are here called, meres, in the county; none of them are extensive, the largest covering only about 116 acres of ground.

Soil, &c.—Every variety of soil is to be met with in the county, and these varieties are so intermingled as scarcely to admit of local distribution or separate description. In the north-western extremity of the county there are patches of deep loam, considerable portions light and gravelly, with an extensive tract of black peat bog. Towards the south-east the soil becomes sandy, intermixed with bog and gravelly patches. Towards the north-east are considerable tracts of sand lying on a red sandstone, intermixed with some gravelly soils. On the eastern border a sandy loam is the predominating soil.

The franchise of Wenlock is for the most part a pale coloured clay, and in the hundreds of Stottesden, Overs, and Manslow, the prevailing soil is a strong clay upon a substratum of limestone. Sand resting upon sandstone predominates in the neighbourhood of Bridgenorth, and in the neighbourhood of Ludlow red clay. The centre of the county exhibits generally a gravelly loam interspersed with beds of clay. North of Shrewsbury is a tract of reddish clay resting upon red rock, and in the hundred of Ford the soil is principally a light coloured clay resting upon limestone. The red soils are observed to be here generally the most productive. Agriculture seems to be well understood, and to be practised upon the most approved systems, being varied according to the soil, and upon all the different soils pretty successful. The crops most generally cultivated are wheat, barley, oats, pease, turnips, and potatoes; this last article in some places most extensively. Vetches are sown for green food to the horses, and some buck wheat on the light soils. In the eastern and western sides of the county the raising of turnips is particularly attended to. In the southern part of the county, where it borders on Herefordshire, orchards are attended to and hops are cultivated, though not upon a very extensive scale. On the banks of the Severn the meadows are extensive and excellent, but often damaged by floods; and in the valleys in the south-western portion of the county the grass lands are excellent. In this part of the county, however, as well as to the east of the Severn, the dairies are small, and the making of butter being the principal object the cheese is but indifferent. Where the county borders with Cheshire they are upon a large scale, and the cheese made here is not inferior to that of its neighbouring county. The cattle most in request are generally of the improved breeds of the surrounding counties, the old Shropshire breed, remarkable for depth of dewlap, being now but rarely met with. The old Shropshire sheep, having black or mottled faces, are still numerous. They are nearly of the same size as the South Down sheep, but are longer in the neck and scarcely so compact in the body, at the same time they are exceedingly hardy, and require so little water that when one is seen drinking it is at once suspected to be diseased. On the Longmynd hills there is a black faced breed indigenous to the soil. They are nimble and exceedingly hardy. On the hills nearer Wales there is a third breed, short-legged, white-faced, without horns, and heavy fleeced, though it is somewhat coarse. The feeding of hogs forms a prominent feature in the rural economy of this county. The rearing and fattening of geese and turkeys is also much attended to in particular districts. These are purchased by dealers for the supply of Birmingham and other large towns. The minerals of this county are of the first importance. They consist of iron and lead ores, lime and freestone, coal, petroleum, &c. These, with the agricultural improvements which the working of them has strongly stimulated, give to the county a high place in the scale of national importance, while its navigation by the Severn and by numerous canals, has made it the emporium of the trade between England and Wales, and the centre of communication with the more distant counties.

Manufactures, &c.—The principal manufacture is that of iron, which, in the district of Colebrook-dale especially, is carried on to a great extent. Coal is raised in great abundance, and vast quantities are exported. The manufacture of flannels is carried on in several places, especially in the neighbourhood of Shrewsbury. Gloves and paper are manufactured at Ludlow; china and Wedgewood ware of the first excellence, at Coalport and Caughley; glass, at Donnington; bricks, tiles, nails, at Broseley; and in every considerable town in the county malting is carried on to a large extent. The relics of antiquity in the county are numerous, and it had at one time 47 religious houses, the remains of some of them possessing great interest, but they are particularized under the parishes where they are locally situated. Salop is in the province of Canterbury, and comprises parts of the dioceses of Hereford, Lichfield and Coventry, St Asaph, and Worcester. It has 214 parishes, of which, 5 are rectories, 58 vicarages, the remainder are curacies. It is divided into 15 hundreds or districts, and has 17 market-towns. Four members are now returned for the county. The two for the northern division are elected at Shrewsbury, and the two for the southern at Church-Stretton. Pop., in 1801, 167,690; in 1831, 222,800. A. P., £1,037,988.

Living, a curacy to the vicarage of St Stephen, in the archd. of Cornwall and dio. of Exeter, returned at £54. Chapel ded. to St Nicholas. Patrons, the mayor and corporation of Saltash. The town is situated on a rocky elevation, rising from the west bank of the Tamar, and is nearly comprised in three narrow and irregularly formed streets. The houses in general have a very antique appearance. The inhabitants are mostly fishermen, or connected with the docks at Devonport. It is one of the principal entrances into Cornwall, and is approached from Devonshire by a ferry over the Tamar, the rent of which forms part of the revenues of the corporation. The government is vested in a mayor, who is water coroner, six aldermen, styled the council of the borough, with an indefinite number of burgesses, a recorder, clerk, officers, &c., who hold the manor of the duchy of Cornwall, and in consequence, keep a court of admiralty. There is a market on Saturday, and fairs for cattle on Candlemas-day and July 25th.

Here was a preceptory of Knights Templars, founded by Queen Maud, consort to Stephen, which latterly fell into the possession of the Knights Hospitallers. Distance from Oxford, 3½ m. S.S.E. Pop., in 1801, 178; in 1831, 229. A. P., £1,678.

SANDFORD, a parish in the hundred of Wootton, co. of Oxford. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Oxford, rated at £70s. 5d. Church ded. to St Martin. Patrons, W. Taylor, Esq., and the duke of Marlborough. Here is a bequest for educating 15 poor children. Distance from Neat-Enstone, 4 m. E.N.E. Pop., in 1801, 312; in 1831, 534. A. P., £3,558.

SANDFORD, a township in the parish of Prees and Whitechurch, co. of Salop, 5 m. N.E. from Wem. Pop., in 1801, 561; in 1831, 487. A. P. with that of the parish.

SANDFORD, a hamlet in the parish of Warcop, co. of Westmoreland, 4 m. W.N.W. from Brough. Returns with the parish.

SANDFORD ORCAS, a parish in the hundred of Horethorne, co. of Somerset. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Wells and dio. of Bath and Wells, rated at £11 9s. 9½d. Church ded. to St Nicholas. Patron, in 1829, John Hutchins, Esq. Here is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Distance from Sherborne, 3 m. N.W. Pop., in 1801, 269; in 1831, 363. A. P., £2,494.

SANDGATE, a hamlet and chapelry, partly in the parish of Folkstone, and partly in the parish of Crediton, co. of Kent. Living, a curacy in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury, endowed with £300 royal bounty. Patron, in 1829, the earl of Darnley, who built the chapel in 1822. The situation of this village, which lies along the shore with hills rising immediately behind it, is in the highest degree salubrious and delightful. The houses are modern, well built, and their number every year increasing. Ship-building, for which it has two extensive yards, seems to be the only trade carried on; but having risen into high esteem as a watering place, having hot and cold baths, bathing machines, with every accommodation for those who are in pursuit of health or pleasure, its prosperity seems to arise at present principally from the influx of summer visitants. Here is a castle similar to those of Walmer and Deal; and the new Military canal which terminates at Cliff-End in Sussex, commences here. It was cut for the defence of the coast, is ninety feet broad, eighteen deep, and has a raised bank for sheltering the defendants. The Wesleyan Methodists have here a place of worship, and there is a school upon the national plan, supported by subscription. Distance from Folkstone, 1½ m. W.S.W. Returns with Folkstone and Cheriton.

from Hexham. Pop., in 1801, 198; in 1831, 240. A. P. with that of the parish.

SANDHURST, a parish in the hundred of Sonning, co. of Berks. Living, a curacy to the vicarage of Sonning, a peculiar of the dean of Salisbury, certified at £15, returned at £25. Church ded. to St Michael. Patron, the dean of Salisbury. In this parish is the royal military college, the senior department of which forms a school for officers of all ranks already in the service of this country, the junior for young gentlemen who are preparing to enter into it. It is under the control of a board of commissioners, consisting of the secretary of war, the master-general of the ordnance, and the principal officers of the home staff, under the presidency of the commander-in-chief. Professors are appointed for the various branches of study, viz. mathematics, practical astronomy, fortification, military drawing and surveying, the principal modern languages, Latin classics, and general history. This institution originated with the late duke of York, and upwards of 3500 individuals have already been qualified by it for entering with the reasonable hope of successful efficiency into the service of their country. Here is a small bequest for educating the children of the poor. Distance from Wokingham, 5 m. S.E. Pop., in 1801, 222; in 1831, 672. A. P., £943.

SANDHURST, a parish in the hundred of Dudstone and King's-Barton, co. of Gloucester. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester, certified at £24, returned at £129 16s. 5d. Church ded. to St Laurence. Patron, the bishop of Bristol. Distance from Gloucester, 3 m. N. Pop., in 1801, 365; in 1831, 434. A. P., £3,739.

SANDHURST, a parish in the hundred of Selbrihtenden, lathe of Scray, co. of Kent. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury, rated at £20. Church ded. to St Nicholas. Patron, the archbishop of Canterbury. The Kennet separates this parish from the co. of Sussex. Here are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists. A national school has also recently been established. A fair for cattle and pedlery is held annually, May 25th. Distance from Tenterden, 7 m. S.W. by W. Pop., in 1801, 887; in 1831, 1307. A. P., £4,695.

SANDIACRE, a parish in the hundred of Morleston and Litchurch, co. of Derby. Living, a curacy, exempt from visitation, in the dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, certified at £23, returned at £43 0s. 4d. Church ded. to St Giles. Patron, the prebendary of Sandiacre, in Lichfield cathedral. The prebend of Sandiacre is returned at £10 11s. 5½d. Patron, the bishop of Lichfield and Coventry. dalene. At the suppression it was endowed with spiritualities to the yearly value of £12, and temporalities to the value of £26 8s. 7d.

SANDWICH,

A cinque port, borough, and market-town, having separate jurisdiction, though locally situated in the hundred of Eastry, lathe of St Augustine, co. of Kent. It comprises the parishes of St Clements, a vicarage, rated at £13 16s. 10d. —St Mary's, a discharged vicarage, rated at £8 1s., returned at £100—and St Peter's, a rectory, rated at £8, returned at £145, all in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury. Patron of the two former, the archdeacon of Canterbury; of the latter, the king and the corporation alternately.

General Description.—The town is situated on the south bank of the Stour, about two miles from its influx with the sea. The houses are many of them ancient, and very irregularly built. The streets are narrow and inconvenient, but tolerably well paved and lighted with oil. Water is supplied from the river, and from a small stream which has its rise near the village of Eastry, and is conveyed to the town by a canal nearly three miles in length, which was constructed under letters patent, granted in the 13th of Edward I. Part of the ancient walls, and one of the gates, facing the quay, are still remaining. The river is crossed by a bridge of two arches, in the centre of which is a swing bridge to allow vessels to pass without lowering their masts, which connects the town with Stonar and the isle of Thanet. The port, extending from the North Foreland, in a north-easterly direction, is six miles distant from the shore, and in a southerly direction to the head of the Godwin Sands, along which it continues for five miles to Sandown castle, in a south-westerly direction up the haven, and thence in a southerly direction to the quay at the mouth of the Gestling, including within its jurisdiction as a cinque port, the ports of Fordwich, Sarte, Ramsgate, Deal, Walmer, and Stonar.

Trade.—At an early period of our history the trade of this port was extensive. Ninety-five vessels, navigated by 1500 seamen, belonged to it, and the customs alone amounted to £16,000 per annum. From the accumulation of sand washed into it from the sea, the progress of which was greatly accelerated by the sinking of a large ship belonging to Pope Paul IV., in its mouth, the harbour became gradually choked up, so as to admit only of small vessels. Its foreign trade is now confined to the Baltic. Its home trade consists in carrying coastwise corn, flour, malt, hops, seeds, fruit, and ashes. Its manufactures of silk, balizes, and flannels, introduced by the exiled Flemings, that were once extensive and flourishing, have dwindled almost, if not entirely, to nothing. Ship-building, upon a small scale, and ropemaking, appear to be its only manufactures. Wednesday and Saturday are the market-days, the former for corn, of which there is always a large supply. A cattle-market is held every alternate Monday; and a fair which con-times a week, commences annually on the 4th of December.

Government, &c.—The government is vested in a mayor, high-steward, recorder, 12 jurats, and 24 common-councilmen, assisted by a town-clerk, &c. The mayor is chosen annually by the resident freemen; the recorder, who holds his office for life, is appointed by the mayor and jurats, who are justices of the peace with the town and liberties. The corporation hold courts of session three times a year, for trying offences committed within the borough, and they have the power of inflicting capital punishment, which was formerly drowning. The borough returns two members to parliament. The several parishes of St Mary, St Peter, and St Clement, and the extra-parochial precinct of St Bartholomew, Sandwich, the parish of Deal, and the parish of Walmer, are comprised within its boundaries. The mayor of Sandwich is the returning officer. The number of electors is about 900. Here are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyan Methodists. Here is a free grammar school, endowed with nearly £40 per annum. This school possesses four scholarships in Lincoln college, Oxford, and the governors of it have the nomination alternately to four more in Caius' college, Cambridge. There is besides a charity school, supported partly by an endowment, and partly by subscription, in which are educated 80 boys and 60 girls upon the national system. Here are three hospitals, St Thomas's, St Bartholomew's, and St John's. Eight aged men and four women receive each from the first £25 per annum; from the second, 16 aged men and women receive each about £50; and from the last, six aged men and women receive each a small house and £20 per annum. Josiah Burckett, secretary to the admiralty in the reigns of Queen Anne, George I. and II., and the friend and patron of Allan Ramsay, was a native of Sandwich. The family of Montague take the title of earl from this place. Distance from London, 68 m. E.S.E. Pop., in 1801, 2452; in 1831, 3136. A. P., £7,278.

SANDWICH, a township in the parish of St Bees, co. of Cumberland, 3 m. S.W. from Whitehaven. Pop., in 1801, 180; in 1831, 517. A. P., £2,086.

SANDY WITH GRITFORD, a parish in the hundred of Biggleswade, co. of Bedford. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Bedford and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £32 2s. 11d. Church ded. to St Swithin. Patron, in 1829, G. C. Yarborough, Esq. This parish, which lies along the Ivel, is remarkable for the growth of cucumbers, with which it almost wholly supplies Covent Garden market. It is also celebrated for rabbits, which are reckoned the most delicate in the kingdom. Distance from Biggleswade, 3 m. N.W. Pop., in 1801, 795; in 1831, 1617. A. P., £6,202.

SANKEY (GREAT), a chapelry in the parish of Prescot, co.-palatine of Lancaster. Living, a curacy in the archd. and dio. of Chester, not in charge, returned at £120. Patron, in 1829, R. Gwillim. Modern canal navigation originated in this chapelry in 1755. Distance SARK, an island in the English channel, lying between Jersey and Guernsey, on the coast of Normandy. It is 5 miles in length, by three in breadth, and, except in one or two places, surrounded by inaccessible rocks. The most accessible place is so steep, that the possessor, Governor Carteret, has cut a subterraneous carriage way through the cliff, which is secured by a strong gate, and defended by several pieces of cannon. It is well watered, the climate healthy, and the soil fruitful, affording more corn than the inhabitants can make use of. It abounds with rabbits and wild fowl. The only manufactures are knit-stockings, gloves, and what are called Guernsey jackets, for sailors. Fishing seems to form the principal employment of the inhabitants, and they carry on a little traffic with Bristol.

SARN, a hamlet in the parish of Meyllteyrn, co. of Carnarvon, North Wales, having an annual fair on the 27th of June. Returns with the parish.

SARNAU, a hamlet in the parish of Penbyrn, co. of Cardigan, South Wales, 9 m. N.E. from Cardigan. Returns with the parish.

SARN-BADRIG, or PATRICK'S-CAWSEY, a reef of rocks on the coast of Merionethshire, extending out to sea 21 miles, and ranging E.N.E. and W.S.W. On the south side there are regular soundings, but on the north these rocks are steep and exceedingly dangerous. At the sea extremity there are many loose stones, some of them of immense size. A portion of this range of rocks is dry at ebb tide, and between Sarn-Badrig and Sarn-y-Bulch, stretching to the north-west from Harlech, lay anciently a hundred of the county called Cantref-Gwadod. It was protected by embankments which, being entrusted to a drunken keeper, were neglected and swept away together with the soil they were formed to protect.

SARNESFIELD, a parish in the hundred of Wolphy, co. of Hereford. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Hereford, rated at £5 6s. 8d. Church ded. to All Saints. Patron, in 1829, T. Mennington, Esq. An eminence here called the Lady's Lift, yields a prospect delightful beyond description. Distance from Weobley, $2\frac{1}{2}$ m. W.S.W. Pop., in 1801, 116; in 1831, 98. A. P., £1,386.

Here is a school for 24 girls endowed with £52 per annum. Distance from Chipping-Norton, $3\frac{1}{2}$ m. S.S.W. Pop., in 1801, 92; in 1831, 154. A. P., £2,513.

SARUM (OLD), formerly a city and borough in the parish of Stratford-under-the-Castle, co. of Wilts. A few fragments of foundation-walls, the ditches and ramparts of the city, with the site of the castle, can still be traced, and form to the antiquarian interesting subjects of inquiry; but it appears to have been totally deserted about the time of Henry VIII. A few individuals holding burgage tenures, have ever since continued to enjoy the borough privileges, erecting a temporary house beneath a tree and insulting public feeling by a mock election at the commencement of every parliament, till the passing the reform bill, 1832, by which the borough is disfranchised. See SALISBURY.

SATLEY, a township in the parish of Lancaster, co.-palatine of Durham, having a chapel. Living, a curacy with that of Lancaster in the archd. and dio. of Durham, returned at £80. SCARBOROUGH, a borough, market-town, parish, and sea-port, possessing separate jurisdiction, locally in the east division of the wapentake of Pickering lythe, N. R. of the co. of York. Living, a discharged vicarage and a curacy in the archd. of the E. R. and dio. of York, the vicarage rated at £13 6s. 8d., returned at £60. The church—a fragment of that which was anciently the convent church of the Cistercian monastery planted here—is ded. to St Mary. Patron, in 1829, Lord Hotham. The curacy is in the patronage of the vicar. A new church has been erected at an expense of £8,000, upwards of £5,000 being granted by the parliamentary commissioners for building new churches. The town is most romantically situated on a bold and rocky slope rising from the northern shore of a beautiful and extensive bay of the German ocean, and consists of a number of well built and spacious streets, the houses rising tier above tier from the shore, which presents an extensive area of smooth and firm sand, in the form of an amphitheatre. Along the cliffs are a number of fine modern buildings, commanding the most delightful prospects, and appropriated to the accommodation of the wealthier classes of the inhabitants and the more elegant valetudinarians, that for bathing and drinking the waters frequent the place during the summer months. The importance of the place arises wholly from its harbour and its mineral springs, the former one of the safest, and the latter among the most salubrious, to be met with in England. The harbour, which, though a little confined in the entrance, is of easy access, is protected by two piers of the most substantial masonry projecting into the sea, each 1200 feet in length. It is a member of the port of Hull, and its limits extend from Flamborough-Head to Peaseholme-Beck, including all the intervening coast to 14 fathoms water at ebb tide. Nearly 200 vessels of various burden belong to the port, which carries on, besides coasting, a vigorous trade with Portugal, Holland, and the Baltic. Here is an extensive manufactory of sail-cloth, several rope-walks, and ship-yards where large vessels are constructed. The fishing here was at one time very extensive, and though it has fallen off is still of considerable importance. Perhaps, however, its spa is of more consequence to Scarborough than its port and trade put together. It consists of two springs which rise at the foot of the cliff at ¼ of a mile south of the town, nearly on a level with the spring tides which sometimes overflow them. Though one of these springs is purgative and the other chalybeate, the ingredients of both are supposed to be the same, only supplied in different proportions. These ingredients are supposed to be iron, vitriol, alum, nitre, and salt. The water is quite transparent, and when poured out of one glass into another throws up a large quantity of air bubbles. These waters have been used medicinally upwards of two centuries, and have been found efficacious in hectic fevers, in nervous hysteria, and hypochondriacal disorders, in asthmas, rheumatisms, scurvy, &c. The quantity prescribed is from two to four half-pints at a time. They are under the care of a person who takes 7s. 6d. for the season from each person, one-third of which is appropriated to the paying of the servants and attendants, the other two parts go to the corporation. In 1737, the springs, by a very strange occurrence, were nearly lost to the town and to the public. On the 29th of December, a part of the cliff about an acre in extent, with a number of cattle grazing upon it, began to sink, and continued sinking for several hours, when it became again stationary, having sunk 17 yards below its former elevation. The sandy ground below the cliff towards the sea, had, in the meantime, been elevated to the height of 20 feet above its former level, and the springs had totally disappeared. Upon digging down to the proper depth they were again restored considerably, it has been said, improved in strength. A very fine iron bridge has been lately thrown over the stream called the Milbeck, by which the disordered cliffs have been united, and the spa made easily accessible to the numerous invalids who come to prove its invigorating qualities. This bridge, which is 414 feet in length, and 75 feet in height, constitutes one of the principal ornaments of the town. The townhall is appropriated to the meetings of the corporation courts, but call for no particular description. The borough-gaol and house of correction are but indifferently adapted for the purposes to which they are applied. The assembly rooms are at least convenient. A small theatre is frequently occupied by a good company of performers; and there are two good circulating libraries. The environs of the town are finely diversified with hill and dale, and rich in scenes of picturesque grandeur. On the summit of a cliff that overlooks the town are the ruins of the castle of Scarborough, once an almost impregnable fortress. During the civil wars it was held for Charles, but besieged and taken by the parliamentarians, who afterwards dismantled it. The ruined walls of the keep, 12 feet in thickness, are still nearly 100 feet in height. The promontory on which this ancient strength is situated, presents a surface of about 19 acres, and is 300 feet above the level of the sea. The government is vested in two bailiffs, a recorder, two coroners, four chamberlains, and 36 common-councilmen. It returns two members to parliament. The bailiffs are the returning officers. The market days are Thursdays and Saturdays, the former principally for corn. The fish market is held on the sands near the harbour. Fairs are held on Holy Thursday and November 22d, chiefly for cattle. Here are places of worship for the Baptists, the Society of Friends, the Independents, the Wesleyan Methodists, and the Roman Catholics. A grammar school affords instruction gratuitously to four scholars, and there are different associations for furthering the education of poor children. The Seamen's hospital is supported by a contribution of sixpence per month, for every seaman employed by owners in the port, during the time the ship in which he sails is at sea. It distributes about £200 per annum. St Thomas' hospital, founded by the corporation for aged and infirm persons, appears to be but poorly supported. Various charitable bequests have been left for the poor, which it would be tedious to enumerate. The Carmelites, Dominicans, and Franciscans had all establishments here. Part of the house that belonged to the latter is now occupied as a workshop. The Lumley family have the title of earl from this place. Distance from London, 217 m. N. Pop., in 1801, 6688; in 1831, 8760. A. P., £14,505.

SCHOLAS. See MORWICK.

SCILLY ISLANDS, amounting to 145 in number, are situated at the western entrance to the English channel, about 30 miles W.S.W. of the Land's End in Cornwall, from which they have been, most probably, at a remote period, disjoined by the violence of the sea. The most important of them are St Mary's, Treco, St Agnes, St Martin's, Breyer, and Sampson (see these Articles); the remainder being barren rocks interspersed with shoals and quick sands, that have often proved fatal to the best ships and the ablest mariners. Their ancient name is said to have been Sylleh, i. e. flat rocks dedicated to the sun; and antiquaries of no mean name have supposed them to be the Cassiterides, or 'Tin Isles,' mentioned by the Greek historians. These islands seem to have become the property of the Benedictines in the abbey of Tavistock, about the year 961, from which period to the 30th of Henry VIII., they were governed by lords abbots, and coroners or crown officers. In 1645 they were held for Charles I., and in 1649, fortified by the then governor, Sir John Grenville, for Charles II., but taken possession of by Admiral Blake, in the following year, for the parliament. Granted away by Henry VIII., they reverted to the crown in the reign of his successor, Mary, and in 1571, were, by Elizabeth, bestowed upon Francis Godolphin, in whose line they remained till 1831, when they again reverted to the crown, and are, if we mistake not, at present under the duchy of Cornwall. The principal employments of the inhabitants are fishing and making kelp. Constables, overseers, and churchwardens, are chosen every year in the principal islands, for so many distinct parishes; though St Mary's was, till within these few years, the only one of them that had a clergyman, divine service being performed at the others occasionally by fishermen, called Island clerks. There are now two missionaries in what are called the Off islands, sent out by the Society for promoting Christian Knowledge, and the Wesleyan Methodists have in the islands four chapels. It was on a reef of these islands, called Gilston rock, or more commonly the Bishop and his Clerks, that Sir Cloudeley Shovel, returning from the Mediterranean, was, with three line of battle-ships, wrecked and totally lost, October 22d, 1707. There are several benefactions for promoting the education of the young, which are under the management of the Society for promoting Christian Knowledge. Pop., in 1821, 2614.

SEAFORD, a borough, parish, and member of the town and port of Hastings, locally situated in the hundred of Flexborough, rape of Pevensey, co. of Sussex. Living, a discharged vicarage with that of Sutton, in the archd. of Lewes and dio. of Chichester, rated at £11 15s. Church ded. to St Leonard. Patrons, the prebendaries of Seaford and Sutton in Chichester cathedral, alternately. Seaford was at one time a large and flourishing town, having four churches and a chapel. It had the misfortune, however, to be burnt down by the French in one of their descents upon this coast, and the still heavier one of being deserted by the sea, in consequence of which it never recovered its former splendour, being, ever since, little more than a fishing village, though enjoying the privilege of a cinque port. Having become of late years a favourite resort for sea-bathing, it has considerably increased, and it is famous for the large and fine flavoured prawns taken on its coast. It has been disfranchised by the reform bill, and, of course, has lost its political importance. It is governed by a bailiff, 12 jurats, and an indefinite number of freemen, whose undivided attention may now be employed in its fishing, its baths, and its manufactures, undisturbed by the ambition of the Lenoxes and the Pelhams, who have so long struggled to obtain a predominancy over their affairs. A school, upon the national plan, maintained by these noble names, for the educating of 100 boys and 50 girls, we hope will not now, for lack of political interest, be abandoned by them. There is a fort on the beach here, and a little to the west of the town a signal station, which in time of war is usually occupied by a small garrison. The market-day nominally is Saturday; and there are fairs, March 13th and July 25th. Distance from London, 60 m. S.S.E. Pop., in 1801, 847; in 1831, 1098. A. P., £3,507.

SEAGRAVE, a parish in the hundred of Goscote, co. of Leicester. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Leicester and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £19 8s. 11½d. Church ded. to All Saints. Patrons, the master and fellows of Queen's college, Cambridge. Distance from Mountsorrel, 3½ m. E.N.E. Pop., in 1801, 301; in 1831, 426. A. P., £3,514.

SEAGRY (LOWER and UPPER) a parish in the hundred of Malmesbury, co. of Wilts. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Wilts and dio. of Salisbury, rated at £7 13s. 1½d., returned at £120. Church ded. to St Mary. Patron, in 1829, the earl of Carnarvon. Distance from Malmesbury, 4 m. S.S.E. Pop., in 1801, 233; in 1831, 234. A. P., £2,130.

Here is a rent charge of £8 per annum for educating 10 boys. Distance from Stokesley, 2 m. N.W. by W. Pop., in 1801, 249; in 1831, 224. A. P., £3,954.

SEAMER, a parish and township in the east division of the wapentake of Pickering lythe, N. R. of the co. of York. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of the N. R. and dio. of York, rated at £18 16s. 5½d. Church ded. to St Martin. Patron, in 1829, J. Denison, Esq. In 1549—the schoolmaster being abroad, and intellect on the march—there was a remarkable insurrection here, which had for its object the restoration of the true Catholic religion, by the abolition of monarchy, and with it all gradations of rank in society. It was supported by the union of 3000 individuals, headed by the parish clerk of this parish, who proceeded to murder several of their less enlightened neighbours. It was, however, soon repressed by the apprehension of the ringleaders, who were executed at York in the month of September the same year. There is a fair held here annually July 15th; and a market for cattle and sheep on the first Monday of every month. Here is a place of worship for the Wesleyan Methodists, and schools for both sexes were founded and liberally endowed by the lord of the manor in 1814. Distance from Scarborough, 4½ m. S.S.W. Pop., in 1801, of the township, 515; of the entire parish, 805; in 1831, of the former, 514; of the latter, 981. A. P. of the entire parish, £8,189.

SEATON-CAREW, a township and chapelry in the parish of Stranton, co.-palatine of Durham. Living, a curacy to the vicarage of Stranton, in the archd. and dio. of Durham. Chapel ded. to St Thomas à Becket. Patron, the vicar of Stranton. This village is much frequented for the purpose of sea-bathing, the beach being smooth, and the sands firm and level to the extent of several miles, affording ample space for the use of machines, while in the village is to be found excellent accommodation, either at the public inns or in the private lodging-houses. Here was a priory of Gilbertine canons, subordinate to that of Sempringham, the revenues of which, at the dissolution, were estimated at £11 2s. 8d. per annum. Distance from Stockton-upon-Tees, 10½ m. N.N.E. Pop., in 1801, 263; in 1831, 333. A. P., £1,158.

SEATON-DELAVAL, a township in the parish of Earsdon, co. of Northumberland. Here are the ruins of the splendid mansion of Seaton-Delaval, built by Admiral Delaval in 1707, from a design by Sir John Vanburgh, one of the most elegant mansions in the north of England, till it was unfortunately burnt to the ground, January 3d, 1822. Of the ancient castle of Seaton-Delaval nothing remains except the chapel, in which divine service is performed every Sabbath day. This chapel is considered to be one of the most perfect specimens of Norman architecture to be met with in the kingdom. It contains some admired ancient monuments. Distance from North Shields, 6 m. N.W. Pop., in 1801, 240; in 1831, 271. A. P., £3,470.

SEATON-HOUSE. See BOULMER.

SEATON (NORTH), a township in the parish of Woodhorn, co. of Northumberland, 6 m. N.E. from Morpeth. Pop., in 1801, 182; in 1831, 150. A. P., with the parish.

SEATON-ROSS, a parish in Holme-Beacon division of the wapentake of Harthill, E. R. of the co. of York. Living, a curacy in the archd. of the E. SEATON-SLUICE, or HARTLEY-PANS, a small sea-port in the township of Hartley, parish of Earsdon, co. of Northumberland, situated at the mouth of a small rivulet called Seaton-Burn, in which the late Sir Ralph Delaval, at an immense expense, formed a new haven, and to prevent its being choked with sand, constructed upon the brook an immense sluice, with flood-gates, to retain the water from the flow of the tide till the ebb, when a sufficient body of water is collected to cleanse the bed of the harbour every 12 hours. From 12 to 15 vessels of 300 tons burden can now ride in safety at this port, and come in or go out almost with any wind. Immense quantities of coal are shipped here for the London market. Here are also extensive glass-bottle-works, malt-kilns, and a brewery. For the defence of the port, which is subordinate to Newcastle, a blockhouse and a battery have been erected. Here is a Presbyterian meeting-house. Distance from North Shields, 6 m. N. Returns with the township of Hartley.

SEAVINGTON-ST-MARY, a parish in the hundred of South Petherton, co. of Somerset. Living, a curacy in the archd. of Taunton and dio. of Bath and Wells, endowed with £600 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grant. Patron, in 1829, Lord Poulett. Distance from Ilminster, 3 m. E. Church ded. to All Saints. Patron, in 1829, Sir Francis Burdett. Here is the site of a small priory, founded in the reign of Henry II. by William Burdett. Distance from Tamworth, 4 m. N.E. by E. Pop., in 1801, 130; in 1831, 129. A. P., £1,287.

SEDBERGH, a market-town and parish in the west division of the wapentake of Staincliffe and Ewroes, W. R. of the co. of York. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester, rated at £12 8s. Church ded. to St Andrew. Patrons, the master and fellows of Trinity college, Cambridge. The town of Sedbergh is situated in a valley surrounded with bleak and barren mountains. It has some cotton mills and manufactories of iron; is governed by a constable who is elected annually; has a market, not much attended to, on Wednesday; and fairs, March 20th, the Wednesday in Whitsun-week, and October 29th, chiefly for live stock. Here are places of worship for the Society of Friends, the Independents, and the Wesleyan Methodists. Here is a free grammar school endowed with lands, &c., to the amount of £500 per annum. This school possesses exhibitions to three fellowships, and ten scholarships in St John's college, Cambridge, the masters and fellows of which are the visitors, and have the appointment of the master. The number of scholars averages from thirty to forty. Here are also various bequests for educating the children of the poor, and at Howgill, in the parish, is a school endowed with £26 per annum, in which about sixty children are educated. Distance from London, 264 m. N.N.W. Pop., in 1801, of the town 1639; of the entire parish 3983; in 1831, of the former 2214; of the latter 4711. A. Church ded. to St Laurence. Patron, the king. Here is a bequest of lands yielding £25 per annum, £15 of which is applied to the educating of 15 poor children, £5 to the apprenticing of a boy every year, and £5 to the immediate wants of the poor. Distance from Grantham, 4 m. W.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 207; in 1831, 252. A. P., £2,421.

SEDEGFELD, a market-town and parish in the north-east division of Stockton ward, co-palatine of Durham. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Durham, rated at £73 18s. 1½d. Church ded. to St Edmund. Patron, the bishop of Durham. The town, standing upon a gentle eminence having extensive prospects, especially to the south and south-east, has the appearance of a large and genteel village, and is celebrated for the salubrity of its atmosphere and the health and longevity of its inhabitants. The centre of the town forms a large square where the market—which is well-supplied—is held on Fridays. The first Friday of every month is a large market or fair for the sale of hogs. The parish is a member of the episcopal manor of Middleham, and is divided into seven constabularies. The Wesleyan Methodists have here a place of worship. Here are a free school—founder unknown—endowed with £50 per annum, several endowed almshouses, and a number of charitable benefactions. Bishop Lowth, prior to his elevation to the see of London, was rector of Sedgely. Distance from Wolverhampton, 3 m. S. Pop., in 1801, of the town 1184, of the entire parish 1756; in 1831, of the former 1429, of the latter 2178. A. P. of the town £3,197; of the entire parish £13,225.

Patrons, the dean and chapter of Norwich. Distance from Castle-Rising, 9 m. N.N.E. Pop., in 1801, 398; in 1831, 595. A. P., £3,994.

SEDGHILL, a parish in the hundred of Dunworth, co. of Wilts. Living, a curacy to the rectory of Berwick-St-Leonard, in the archd. and dio. of Salisbury. Church ded. to St Catherine. Patron, the Rev. C. H. Grove. Distance from Hindon, 4½ m. S.W. Pop., in 1801, 199; in 1831, 235. A. P., £2,432.

SEDGLEY, a parish in the north division of the hundred of Seisdon, co. of Stafford. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Stafford and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, rated at £5 12s. 8½d. Church ded. to All Saints. Patron, in 1829, Lord Dudley. To accommodate the rapidly increasing population, two chapels have been recently erected within the parish, partly at the expense of the inhabitants and partly by grant from the commissioners for erecting new churches. This parish abounds with coal, ironstone, and limestone, the working of which employs the greater part of the inhabitants. The iron is not only extracted here from the ore, but is wrought up into bars, hoops, nails, locks, hinges, coffee mills, &c., and by the Elsington and Wyrley canal, which intersects the parish, is conveyed to markets all over the country. Besides the established church with its two chapels, there are here two congregations of particular Baptists, three of Wesleyan Methodists, one of Primitive Methodists, one of Independents, one of Presbyterians, and two of Roman Catholics. Here is a small bequest for the education of poor children, and an excellent school on the national plan for 200 boys and 200 girls, erected by the late Lord Dudley. There is another of the same description at Gornal, for 100 boys and 100 girls. Both are supported by subscription. The singular fossil called Dudley locust, is found here in an isolated limestone rock, called the Wren's Nest Hill. Distance from London, 123 m. Pop., in 1801, 9674; in 1831, 20,577. A. P., £22,954.

SEDGWICK, a township in the parish of Heversham, co. of Westmoreland, $4\frac{1}{2}$ m. S. from Kendal. SELATTYN, a parish in the hundred of Oswestry, co. of Salop. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of St Asaph, rated at £12 9s. 9d. Church ded. to St Mary. Patron, in 1829, W. Lloyd, Esq. James Wylding, one of the Westminster Assembly divines; and the notorious Dr Henry Sacheverell, were rectors here. A school on the national plan has been recently erected. Distance from Oswestry, 3 m. N.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 701; in 1831, 1142. A. P., £8,075.

SELBORNE, a hundred in the co. of Southampton. It lies in the east side of the co., comprises 6 parishes, and in 1831, contained a resident population of 2322 souls.

SELBORNE, a parish in the hundred of Selborne-Alton, north division of the co. of Southampton. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Winchester, rated at £8 2s. 1d. The church—having a fine altar-piece from the pencil of Albert Durer—is ded. to St Mary. Patrons, the provost and fellows of Magdalene college, Oxford. Here was a priory of Black canons, which became a part of the endowment of Magdalene college, Oxford. The Rev. Gilbert White, author of that delightful work, the Natural History of Selborne, was born here in 1720. Here is a bequest of £8 per annum for educating poor children. Distance from Alton, 4 m. S.E. Pop., in 1801, 762; in 1831, 924. A. P., £4,324.

SELBY, a market-town and parish partly in the liberty of St Peter of York and partly in the lower division of the wapentake of Barkstone-Ash, E. R. of the co. of York. Living, a curacy, a peculiar of the dean and chapter of York, certified at £17 10s., returned at £100. Church ded. to St Mary and St German. Patron, in 1829, the Hon. E. Petre. Selby is situated on the west bank of the Ouse, which gliding in a deep, broad, and majestic stream is crossed by an elegant wooden bridge, particularly admired for the facility with which it opens in the centre for the admission of vessels. Though upward of 70 tons in weight, the construction is so nice that it can be opened and shut in the space of one minute. The great road from Edinburgh to London passes through the town, which is well-built, paved, and lighted, having a handsome Gothic market cross, and a neat townhall, lately erected by subscription, the Hon. E. Petre having given the site for the purpose. It has manufactories of sailcloth, several tan-yards, an iron foundry, and a yard for ship-building. A canal, connecting the Ouse and the Aire, and opening a direct communication with Leeds and the W. R. of Yorkshire, has greatly improved the general trade of the town, the greater part of the goods sent to that district being disembarked here and forwarded by small vessels on the canal to their ultimate destination. Ships of 200 tons burden come up to Selby easily, and by the recent establishment of a branch custom-house, they can clear out without touching, as was formerly necessary, at the port of Hull. Steamboats ply constantly to and from Hull, and there are communications daily with London and every port upon the coast. The market-day is Monday, and fairs are held on Easter-Tuesday, Monday after June 22d, and on Michaelmas day for horses, cattle, cloth, &c. A petty-session for the wapentake is held every alternate Monday, and courts leet and baron twice in the year, by the lord of the manor, the Hon. E. R. Petre. Selby is situated in a district naturally fertile, but its fertility has been greatly increased by a judicious system of irrigation, whereby the waters of the Aire and Ouse are made to overflow the lands and detained on them, till by the sediment they deposit the grounds are richly manured and otherwise rendered doubly productive. Wild, for the use of dyers, is raised here in large quantity, and flax was at one time extensively cultivated. Here was a splendid establishment of Benedictines, founded 1069, by William the Conqueror, to the honour of St Mary and St German, which, in a short time acquired such extensive possessions and immunities as rendered it equal in rank with the church of St Peter at York, its superior, with that of St Mary's in that city being the only mitred abbots north of the Trent. Its revenues at the dissolution were estimated at £819 2s. 6d. William, with his queen Matilda, being here on a visit the year after its foundation, she was delivered in the abbey of a son, who filled afterwards the throne of England under the name of Henry I. The parish church was the conventual church to this establishment, and is all that now remains of a pile of building among the most sumptuous and magnificent in the kingdom. Here are places of worship for the Society of Friends, Independents, Methodists, Calvinistic and Wesleyan, Roman Catholics, and Unitarians. The Blue coat school, supported by donations, legacies, and subscriptions, educates and clothes 20 boys, and on the foundation of Leonard Chamberlain, are educated 13 boys and 10 girls; an almshouse for seven poor widows is supported upon this same foundation. Thomas Johnson, the first botanist who in England published a local catalogue of plants, was a native of this town. He lost his life in a skirmish with the parliamentarians, 1644, having obtained the rank of a colonel in the royal army. Distance from London, 181 m. N.W. Pop., in 1801, 2861; in 1831, 4600. A. P., £9,723.

SELBY'S-FOREST, a township in the parish of Kirk-Newton, co. of Northumberland, an extensive district consisting of moors and mountains, among the latter of which is the far-famed Cheviot, which gives name to a pretty extensive range of hills of various elevations. A lake on the summit of this mountain is often frozen at midsummer. Pop., in 1801, 57; in 1831, 66. A. P., £1,401.

SELHAM, a parish in the hundred of Easebourne, rape of Chichester, co. of Sussex. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Chichester, rated at £4 15s. 11½d. Church ded to St James. Patrons, the principal and fellows of Brazen-nose college, Oxford. The Arundel navigation passes through this parish. Distance from Petworth, 3½ m. W.S.W. Pop., in 1801, 78; in 1831, 89. A. P., £761.

SELKLEY, a hundred in the co. of Wilts. It lies in the east side of the co., comprises 11 parishes, and in 1831, contained a resident population of 6555 souls.

SELLACK, a parish in the upper division of the hundred of Wormelow, co. of Hereford. Living, a vicarage with the curacies of King's-Caple, Marstow, and Pencoedy, rated at £16 6s. 8d. Church ded. to St Teisiliu. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Hereford. Distance from Ross, 4½ m. N.W. Pop., in 1801, 490; in 1831, 327. A. P., £4,718.

SELLING, a parish in the hundred of Boughton-under-Blean, lathe of Scray, co. of Kent. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury, rated at £6 13s. 4d. Church ded. to St Mary. Patron, in 1829, Lord Sondres. An ancient fortification on Shottendon hill in this parish is supposed to be Danish. Distance from Faversham, 4 m. S.S.E. Pop., in 1801, 500; in 1831, 589. A. P., £2,553.

SELLINGE, a parish partly in Romney-Marsh, and partly in the hundred of Street, lathe of Shepway, co. of Kent. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury, rated at £7 4s. 5d. Church ded. to St Mary. Patron, the king. Here is a bequest of £5 per annum for educating five children. Distance from Hythe, 5 m. N.W. Pop., in 1801, 361; in 1831, 451. A. P., £2,910.

SELMESTON, a parish in the hundred of Rushmonden, rape of Povensey, co. of Sussex. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Lewes and dio. of Chichester, rated at £7 5s. 8d., returned at £122. Church ded. to St Mary. Patron, the prebendary of Heathfield in the cathedral church of Chichester. Distance from Lewes, 6½ m. E.S.E. Pop., in 1801, 130; in 1831, 189. A. P., £2,772.

SELSEY, a parish in the hundred of Manhood, rape of Chichester, co. of Sussex. Livings, a rectory a sinecure, and a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Chichester, rated, the former at £11 3s. 4d., the latter at £8. The church—an ancient edifice—ded. to St Peter. Patron, the bishop of Chichester. This parish occupies a peninsula formed by an inlet of the sea called Selsey harbour. Its name seems to be derived from a Saxon word signifying the island of sea calves, or seals, with which it at one time abounded. The village, which is neatly built, forms only one street. A court baron is held annually, and there is a fair July 14th for toys, &c. About the year 681, St Wilfrid having preached the gospel to the South Saxons, and converted many of them to the faith, obtained, by the favour of Aldilwach, king of the country, this village, then consisting of 87 families, with all the lands of the peninsula on which it was situated, for the building and endowing a monastery for those religious persons who had been his companions in his exile. It was dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, and its abbot, Eadbercht, being, 711, consecrated the first bishop of the South Saxons, the episcopal seat was fixed, and remained here till bishop Stigand, in consequence of the decree of the synod of London, translated it, 1075, to the larger city of Chichester. The site of the ancient village has been overflowed by the sea, and its remains are said to be still visible at ebb tide. Distance from Chichester, 8 m. S. Pop., in 1801, 564; in 1831, 821. A. P., £3,283.

SELSIDE WITH WHITWELL, a chapelry in the parish of Kirkby-Kendal, co. of Westmoreland. Living, a curacy in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester, certified at £8, returned at £117 15s. SETTLE, a market town in the parish of Giggleswick, W. R. of the co. of York, seated on the river Ribbles, at the base of a limestone cliff called Castleberg, which rises above the town to the height of 300 feet. From the summit of this cliff there is a most delightful view of the rich valley, with the river winding through it, in which the town stands. This valley is enclosed on each side by craggy mountains, including the lofty elevations of Pendle hill on the south, Pennigant on the north, and Ingleborough on the north-west, and is so very rich that though only occupied for grazing, it is let generally at £6 per acre. Its appearance to the eye, however, is somewhat hurt by being subdivided, not with thorn hedges, but with dry stone walls. The town is upon the whole well built, the streets partially paved, and the supply of spring water is abundant. Here are several cotton mills, at which the greater part of the inhabitants find employment. There is here also a paper mill, and several rope walks. Under the market-cross is the town jail, which is entered by a trap door down a flight of steps, and lighted by a small grating. The market day is Tuesday, and fairs are held on Tuesday before Palm-Sunday, Thursday before Good-Friday, and every other Friday till Whit-Sunday, April 26th, June 2d, August 18th and 21st, and the first Tuesday after October 27th. To the east of the town are two rocking stones of immense weight; when put in motion the noise they make is like that of distant thunder. A constable is appointed annually at a court baron held by the lord of the manor. Here are places of worship for the Independents and Wesleyan Methodists, and a national school is supported by subscription. Distance from London, 285 m. N.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 1136; in 1831, 1627. A. P., £6,683.

SETTRINGTON, a parish and township in the wapentake of Buckrose, E. R. of the co. of York. Living, a rectory in the archd. of the E. R. and dio. of York, rated at £42 12s. 6d. Church ded. to All Saints. Patrons, in 1829, the trustees of the late earl of Bridgewater. Distance from New Malton, 4 m. E.S.E. Pop., in 1801, of the township, 414; of the entire parish, 614: in 1831, of the former, 527; of the latter, 779. A. P., of the township, £6,814; of the entire parish, £8,900.

SEVENHAMPTON, a parish in the hundred of Bradley, co. of Gloucester. Living, a curacy in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester, certified at £10, returned at £38. Church ded. to St Andrew. Patrons, in 1829, William Morris and John Hincksman, Esqrs. Distance from Winchcombe, 4 m. S.E. Pop., in 1801, 349; in 1831, 465. A. P., £2,941.

SEVENHAMPTON, a chapelry in the parish of Highworth, co. of Wilts. Living, a curacy to the vicarage of Highworth, a peculiar of the dean of Salisbury, not in charge. Chapel ded. to St Andrew. Patron, the vicar of Highworth.

Distance from Highworth, 1½ m. S.S.E. Pop., in 1801, 187; in 1831, 239. A. P., with the parish.

SEVEN-OAKS, a township in the parish of Great Budwith, 3 m. N.E. from Norwich. Pop., in 1801, 130; in 1831, 149. A. P. with Cogshall.

SEVEN-OAKS, a market-town and parish in the hundred of Codaheath, lathe of Sutton-at-Hone, co. of Kent. Living, a sinecure rectory and a vicarage peculiar in the dio. of Canterbury, rated, the former at £13 6s. 8d., the latter at £15 3s. 1½d. Church ded. to St Nicholas. Patron, in 1829, the Rev. T. S. Curtis. The town is situated on a ridge of hills near the Darent, and derives its name from seven oak trees that grew upon one of the eminences upon which it is built. It consists principally of two broad streets, in one of which, the High-street, stands the ancient market-house, where the petty sessions for the lathe of Sutton-at-Hone and a court of requests for the recovery of small debts are held. The houses are many of them large and handsome, and inhabited by wealthy and genteel families. There are a number of silk mills in the neighbourhood. The market-day is Saturday, principally for corn; and on the 3d Tuesday of every month there is a market for cattle, which is numerously attended. Fairs are held July 10th and October 12th. A bailiff, high constable, &c., are chosen annually at a court leet; their authority extends to little more than the superintendence of the public charities, which are numerous and important. The town is within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates. Two chapels, curacies to the vicarage, have been recently erected in the parish by Lord Amherst and Multon Lumbard, Esq. The patronage of both, on the decease of the founders, will be vested in the vicar. Here are two places of worship for Baptists, one for Wesleyan Methodists, and one for Supralapsarians. A free grammar school was founded here and endowed in 1431, by Sir William Rumpstead, or Sennocke, a foundling brought up in this town upon charity, apprenticed to a grocer in London, of which he had afterwards the honour of being lord mayor, and, ultimately, of obtaining the dignity of knighthood. Queen Elizabeth having granted a charter to this establishment, it obtained the designation of Queen Elizabeth's free school, and has now an annual income of £1000 per annum. This school has seven scholarships, four of £15 per annum each, in any college at either of the universities; two of £12, in Jesus' college, Cambridge; and one of £4, at either of the universities. A school for educating the children of the poor was founded and endowed in 1675, by Margaret Boswell, the annual income of which is now about £700. From this fund large deductions have been made, for repairing the sea-wall at Barnham-Level, and upwards of £2000 has been expended upon a new school-house, in which about 300 children are educated upon the national system. A premium of £12, as a prentice fee, is allowed to the boys on leaving the school. The founder of the grammar school, Sir William Rumpstead, or Sennocke, also founded an almshouse in which 32 persons are maintained, and from which an allowance is made to 16 out-pensioners. Here, in 1450, the royal army under the command of Sir Humphrey Stafford was defeated by the Kentish rebels, under Jack Cade. Here, too, is Knowle-Park, a splendid mansion covering five acres of ground, the seat of the earl of Plymouth. Distance from London, 23 m. S.E. Pop., in 1801, 2279; in 1831, 4709. A. P., £10,742.

SEVINGTON, a parish in the hundred of Chart and Longbridge, lathe of Scray, co. of Kent. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury, rated at £8 14s. 0½d. Church ded. to St Mary. Patron, in 1829, the Rev. Edward Norwood. Distance from Ashford, 2½ m. S.E. by E. Pop., in 1801, 85; in 1831, 111. A. P., £1,281.

SEWARDESLEY, in the parish of Easton Neston, co. of Northampton, the site of an ancient priory of Cistercian nuns, dedicated to the honour of the blessed Virgin Mary. It was, in the reign of Henry VI., united with the monastery of St-Mary-de-la-Pre, near Northampton. A little before the dissolution it contained four religious, whose yearly income was valued at £18 11s. 2d.

SEWARDSTONE, a hamlet in the parish of Waltham-Abbey, or Holy-Cross, 1½ m. S. from Waltham-Abbey, said to have been formerly a distinct parish, and exhibiting still some ruins that go by the name of the Old Church. The Wesleyan Methodists have here a place of worship. Pop., in 1801, 495; in 1831, 825. A. P. with the parish.

SEWERBY WITH MARTON, a township in the parish of Bridlington, E. R. of the co. of York, 2 m. E. from Bridlington. Pop., in 1801, 279; in 1831, 352. A. P., £2,205.

SEWSTERN, a chapelry in the parish of Buckminster, co. of Leicester. Living, a curacy in the archd. of Leicester and dio. of Lincoln. Chapel ded. to St Michael. Here are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyan Methodists. Pop., in 1801, 221; in 1831, 368. A. P., £1,584.

Patron, in 1829, Lord Braybrooke. Distance from Beccles, 5 m. S. Pop., in 1801, 157; in 1831, 198. A. P., £1,306.

SHADOXHURST, a parish in the hundred of Blackbourne, lathe of Scray, co. of Kent. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury, rated at £7 13s. Church ded. to St Peter and St Paul. Patron, the king. Distance from Ashford, 4 m. S.W. Pop., in 1801, 188; in 1831, 239. A. P., £1,159.

SHADWELL, a parish in the Tower division of the hundred of Ossulstone, co. of Middlesex. Living, a rectory, exempt from visitation, in the dio. of London. Church ded. to St Paul. Patron, the dean of St Paul's. There is here a chapel-of-ease, a curacy to the rectory. The parish, which is on the north bank of the Thames, comprises several streets, lighted with gas, and supplied with water from the East London water-works. It is within the jurisdiction of the new police, and a court of requests held in Whitechapel. Here are places of worship for the Independents, and the Primitive and the Wesleyan Methodists. About 80 children are educated in a parochial school, which is supported by subscription. The union school, in Shakspeare's-walk, also supported by subscription, and conducted on the Lancasterian plan, educates about 600 children of both sexes. Situated also in Shakspeare's-walk is the Dissenters' charity school, in which, since its institution in 1712, there have been educated 1592 boys, of whom 1522 have also been apprentices. There are at present on the foundation, 70 boys, who are clothed and educated. The funds are raised by subscription. A chapel is attached to this institution. In the parish there are also 31 almshouses for the widows of poor seamen, founded and endowed in 1713, by Captain James Cooke, and Alice his wife. Distance from St Paul's cathedral, 2½ m. E.S.E. Pop., in 1801, 8828; in 1831, 9544. A. P., £22,764.

SHADWELL, a township in the parish of Thorne, W. R. of the co. of York, 5½ m. N.N.E. from Leeds. It has a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Pop., in 1801, 141; in 1831, 248. A. P., £1,392.

SHAFTESBURY, or SHASTON, a borough and market-town, having separate jurisdiction, but locally situated in the hundred of Monckton-up-Wemborne, Shast-East, division of the co. of Dorset. It comprises three parishes, St Peter's, St James's, and the Holy Trinity, all three rectories in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, rated, the first at £11 10s. 2½d. the second at £1 11s. 0½d., the third, which is united with the first, at £4 1s. 10½d., returned together at £140. Patron, in 1829, the earl of Shaftesbury. The town, which is very ancient, being by some supposed to have existed prior to the descent of the Romans, by others, to have been founded by Alfred about the year 880, is situated on a hill near the southern extremity of the county, where it borders with Wiltshire. The houses are mostly of stone, and well built, but the streets are irregular, narrow, and unpaved. From its elevated site, it commands a number of finely picturesque views, but suffers great inconveniences for the want of water. It possesses one well of immense depth, from which the water is raised by machinery worked by a horse, but a great proportion of the water used by the inhabitants is brought from the neighbouring parish of Motcomb, whence it is bought, and sold to the inhabitants by individuals, who in this way obtain a livelihood. It has almost no trade, and the manufacture of shirt buttons, which used to employ a great number of women and children, has greatly declined. The market-day is Saturday; and there are fairs on the Saturday before Palm-Sunday, June 24th, and November 23d. By charter from James I., confirmed by Charles II., the government of the town is vested in a mayor and 12 capital burgesses, by a recorder, who elect annually a town-clerk, a coroner, and two sergeants-at-mace. The mayor, ex-mayor, and recorder, are justices of the peace, and with the principal burgesses hold courts of record weekly for the recovery of debts contracted in the borough below £10. The borough formerly sent two members to parliament, by the reform bill it now sends only one. The mayor is the returning officer. Here was an abbey for Benedictine nuns, founded and endowed by Alfred, in 888. It was originally ded. to the blessed Virgin Mary, but Edward the Martyr being buried in it, from that period it was called by his name. At the dissolution its revenues were estimated at £1929 1s. 3d. Here are places of worship for the Society of Friends, the Independents, and the Wesleyan Methodists. There is a free school, with an endowment for clothing, educating, and apprenticing 20 boys. There is also an endowment for 10 poor men, and an almshouse for 16 poor women. Shaftesbury was the birth-place of James Granger, author of the Biographical History of England, and it gives the title of earl to the family of Cooper. Distance from London, 101 m. W.S.W. Pop., in 1801, 2423; in 1831, 3061. A. P., £6,959.

SHAFTO (EAST and WEST), contiguous townships in the parish of Hartburn, co. of Northumberland, the former 12, the latter 12½ m. W.S.W. from Morpeth. Pop., in 1801, of the former, 36; of the latter, 40; in 1831, of the former, 41; of the latter, 68. A. P. of both with the parish.

SHAFTON, a township in the parish of Felkirk, W. R. of the co. of York, 5 m. N.E. from Barnesley. Pop., in 1801, 174; in 1831, 248. A. P., £926.

SHALBOURN, a parish, partly in the hundred of Kintbury-Eagle, co. of Berks, and partly in the hundred of Kinwardstone, co. of Wilts. Living, a vicarage, a peculiar of the dean of Salisbury, rated at £14 17s. 6d. Church ded. to St Michael. Patrons, the dean and canons of Windsor. In that part of the parish which is in the co. of Wilts is a dilapidated chapel, with a house attached to it, supposed to have been used by the monks of Sarum, as a place of occasional relaxation from the austerities of the cloister. Pop., in 1801, 774; in 1831, 922. A. P., £3,061.

SHALDEN, a parish in the hundred of Odiam, Basingstoke division of the co. of Southampton. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Winchester, rated at £9 15s. 10d. Church ded. to St Peter and St Paul. Patron, the king. Distance from Alton, 3 m. N.W.W. Pop., in 1801, 158; in 1831, 167. A. P., £1,133.

SHALDON GREEN, a hamlet in the parish of Stoke-in-Teignhead, co. of Devon, pleasantly situated on the south bank of the river Teign, over which a fine bridge has been recently erected. cholas. Patron, in 1829, Sir J. Laham, Bart. Distance from Market-Harborough, $6\frac{1}{2}$ m. N.W. Pop., in 1801, 34; in 1831, 39. A. P., £2,113.

SHANKLIN, a parish in the liberty of East Medina, isle of Wight, co. of Southampton. Living, a curacy to the rectory of Bonchurch, in the archd. and dio. of Winchester. Patron, the rector of Bonchurch. An oaken chest, curiously carved with a Latin inscription and the arms of the see, bearing date 1512, is carefully preserved in the church. It was the gift of Thomas Silkstead, prior of Winchester. Here is an immense chasm commencing about half a mile from the shore and gradually increasing in breadth and depth, becoming at its opening into the sea 180 feet wide by 90 in depth. It is overgrown with shrubs and brushwood, and has some most romantic looking cottages rising along its sandy shore. Distance from Newport, $9\frac{1}{2}$ m. S.E. Pop., in 1811, 138; in 1831, 255. A. P., £756.

SHAP, a parish in West ward, co. of Westmoreland. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Carlisle, rated at £8 15s. 7d., returned at £91 10s. The church, having a square tower with three bells, is ded. to St Michael. Patron, in 1829, Lord Lonsdale. The town of Shap consists of one long straggling street. It had formerly a market on Wednesday, and three annual fairs, each of two days' continuance, but they have long since gone into desuetude. A small market is held on Monday, and there is a fair for cattle and pedlery May 4th. About a mile to the west of the town on the highway between Penrith and Kendal, are the venerable ruins of Shap abbey, the tower of which is still in a tolerable state of preservation. It was founded for Premonstratensian canons by Thomas Fitz-Gospatrik, about the year 1150. It contained 20 monks at the dissolution, and its revenues were rated at £166 10s. 6d. In this parish are the Karl-Lofts composed of two lines of immense obelisks of unhewn granite, inclosing an area of more than half a mile in length, and from 20 to 30 yards in breadth. These obelisks, many of them from three to four yards in diameter, are placed at irregular distances, and at the upper end is a kind of circus or hippodrome, supposed to have been the place of sacrifice. There is here a school endowed with about £25 per annum, upon which 20 children are educated. Dr John Mill, eminent for his knowledge in Greek, and the well-known editor of a highly valued edition of the New Testament, was a native of this parish, he died 1701. Distance from Orton, 6 m. N.W. SHARPLES, a township in the parish of Bolton, co.-palatine of Lancaster. Here are a large power-loom factory and bleaching establishment, affording employment to upwards of 1300 persons. Here, too, are the reservoirs from which the town of Bolton is supplied with water. Coal is abundant in the neighbourhood, and the children are entitled to gratuitous education at the free school of Eagley-Bridge in the township of Turton. Distance from Bolton, 4 m. N.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 873; in 1831, 2589. A. P., £3,228.

SHARROW, a township in the parish of Rippon, W. R. of the co. of York, in which a chapel has recently been erected, principally at the expense of the society for building additional churches; it has bequests also for the gratuitous education of 14 children. Distance from Rippon, $1\frac{1}{2}$ m. E.N.E. Pop., in 1801, 106; in 1831, 108. A. P., £1,620.

SHATTON. See BROUGH.

SHAUGH, a parish in the hundred of Plympton, co. of Devon. Living, a curacy annexed to that of Sampford-Spiney, in the archd. of Totness and dio. of Exeter, certified at £25, returned at £86. Patrons, the dean and canons of Windsor. Distance from Earls-Plympton, 5 m. N. Pop., in 1801, 480; in 1831, 570. A. P., £3,988.

SHAVINGTON WITH GRESTDY, a township in the parish of Wybunbury, co.-palatine of Chester, chiefly remarkable as containing the old manorial seat of the Wodenoths, venerated from its age, its windows filled with stained glass, and its many relics of former ages. Of the family of the Wodenoths, was John the antiquary, born in 1624. Distance from Nantwich, $4\frac{1}{2}$ m. E. Pop., in 1801, 189; in 1831, 320. A. P., £1,724.

SHAW cum DONNINGTON, a parish in the hundred of Faircross, co. of Berks. Living, a rectory with that of Donnington in the archd. of Berks and dio. of Salisbury, rated at £12 11s. 8d. Church ded. to St Mary. Patron, in 1829, Dr Penrose. At the manor-house here, an attempt was made upon the life of Charles I., by one of Cromwell's soldiers, 1644; a brass plate on the spot where the ball entered, still records the event. It was garri-soned for Charles in the second battle of Newbury. Several cannon balls, picked up occasionally about the grounds, are carefully preserved, for what purpose we do not know. A cloak, a hat, a bridle and a spur, said to have belonged to Cromwell, and a bed, upon which Queen Anne reposed, are also shown here. Almshouses for twelve poor persons were founded, 1618, by Sir Richard Abberbury. Distance from Speenhamland, $1\frac{1}{2}$ m. N.E. Pop., in 1801, 494; in 1831, 620. A. P., £2,827.

SHAW, a chapelry in the parish of Oldham cum Prestwich, co.-palatine of Lancaster. Living, a curacy in the archd. and dio. of Chester, endowed with £400 royal bounty. Patron, the vicar of Prestwich. SHEERNESS, a ville and sea-port in the parish of Minster-in-Sheppey, co. of Kent, situated on the north-west point of the isle of Sheppey, at the confluence of the Medway or West Swale, with the Thames. It comprises two districts, Bluetown and Miletown, and has been recently much enlarged. From the facilities afforded by the beach, which is remarkably clean and forms a delightful promenade, it has become during the summer season a favourite resort for sea-bathing. From the cliffs leading from the beach towards Minster, the view is perhaps one of the finest in the kingdom. The harbour, which from recent improvements is both safe and commodious, has often, from the great number of vessels lying in it, a most splendid appearance. Passage boats come and go with every tide, and a steam-boat plies daily to and from Chatham. Steam-boats also maintain a regular communication with London during the summer season. The dock-yard here, which has of late years been extended and improved at an expense of three millions sterling, is certainly one of the finest in Europe. It covers 60 acres of ground, and is surrounded by a brick wall which cost upwards of £40,000. The docks are capable of receiving men-of-war of the first class, with all their guns, stores, and equipment on board, and they can be pumped dry at pleasure by means of two steam-engines. The store-house, which is six stories, is capable of containing 80,000 tons of naval stores. The commissioners and principal officers of the establishment have handsome houses within the yard, and a palace has been erected in the garrison for the port-admiral, containing state rooms for the reception of the royal family and the lords of the admiralty. The whole is protected by regular fortifications, and there is always a garrison kept up under the proper officers. The market-day is Saturday, but the town has no market place. An elegant church has recently been erected. Patrons, the board of admiralty. Here are also places of worship for Baptists, Independents, Methodists Primitive and Wesleyan, Roman Catholics, Unitarians, and Jews; and several Sabbath schools. Distance from London, 50 m. E.S.E. Pop., in 1801, 1422; in 1831, 61. A. P. with the parish. SHEET, a tything in the parish of Petersfield, co. of Southampton, 1 m. N.E. from Petersfield. Pop., in 1801, 247; in 1831, 380. A. P., £2,514.

SHEFFIELD,

A parish and township in the upper division of the wapentake of Strafforth and Tickhill, W. R. of the co. of York.

History.—The local history of Sheffield commences at an early era, though none of the edifices at present existing in the town lay claim to antiquity. The Lovetots, the Furnivals, the Talbots, were successively lords of Hallamshire, (as the surrounding district was anciently denominated) from the Conquest to the beginning of the 17th century, when the manorial property passed—by marriage—to the Howard family; the present duke of Norfolk, who was born at Sheffield, being the patron. The noble castle—the stronghold of the feudal times, and in which Mary, queen of Scots, was confined for about 14 years—was demolished after the civil war, and so completely have the ruins themselves been obliterated, that the site is only distinguished by the names Castle-street, Castle-hill, &c. The mouldering remains of the manor house, a summer mansion of the Talbots, on the Lark-hill, a commanding eminence near the town, and occasionally the residence of the unfortunate Mary, comprise the only ruins in the vicinity.

General Description.—The town is situated chiefly within the angle formed by the confluence of the rivers Don and Sheaf, its name being derived from the latter. Over the Don it has an iron bridge, and two of stone, one of them—from a monastic institution that stood near it—still called the Lady's bridge. Over the Sheaf it has two stone bridges, each having one arch, one of them erected only a few years ago for the purpose of opening a more direct communication with the canal basin. The town extends from north to south about a mile and a half, and from east to west about three-fourths of a mile. The streets are generally well-paved and lighted with gas. Some of the old streets are narrow and irregularly built; and from the number of forges, furnaces, and engines constantly at work, the town is often covered with a cloud of smoke. It is a mistake, however, to assume on this account, that Sheffield is on the whole less clean than other large towns, as from its situation on a sort of eminence, the streets descend in almost every direction from the parish church, so that after every considerable shower, the whole town appears remarkably clean, instead of becoming a lake of mud, as is the case with several other towns. It is remarkable that from every street the country may be seen, and around Sheffield it is mostly of a pleasing character. The western precinct—a fine ascending slope—is thickly studded with tradesmen's mansions, which, with their surrounding pleasure-plots, and the vicinity of an extensive botanical garden, now in progress, renders the neighbourhood on that side very interesting. On the east side lies the extensive tract formerly pertaining to the castle—once noted for its large timber—now mostly cultivated in small farms, and partly built upon, but still called 'the Park.' In addition to public wells, water is abundantly supplied by an incorporated company.

Ecclesiastical Affairs.—The church, a fine old structure in the form of a cross, with a tower and spire rising from the centre, is ded. to St Peter. Living, a vicarage, in the archd. and dio. of York, rated at £12 15s. 2½d. Patrons, in 1833, Marmaduke Lawson and Phillip Gell, Esqrs. In addition to the parish church there are five chapels-of-ease, all modern, some of them elegant not to say magnificent structures, they are all curacies, and in the patronage of the vicar. There are at least 20 chapels belonging to the different religious sects, several of them handsome as well as commodious. Of these, six belong to the Wesleyan Methodists; the same number to other denominations of Methodists; five to the Independents; the Baptists, the Society of Friends, the Roman Catholics, and the Unitarians, have one each.

Hospitals, &c.—The earl of Shrewsbury's hospital supports 18 men and 18 women.—Hollis' hospital supports 16 aged women, widows of cutlers or of persons connected with the trade. There is a free grammar school, founded in 1603, by Thomas Smith of Crowland, with lands now yielding an annual revenue of £175 10s. There are on the foundation at present 20 scholars. There are also in opposite corners of the churchyard the boys' and the girls' charity schools. In the former about 80 boys are maintained, clothed, educated, and apprenticed; in the latter, 60 girls are maintained, clothed, educated, and afterwards placed out in respectable service. There is also a school for reading, writing, and arithmetic, with a considerable endowment. Two Lancasterian, two national, several infant schools, and a school of industry, are supported by subscription; as are also commodious Sunday schools connected with the churches and chapels, besides a great number of other institutions suggested and promoted by local benevolence. There is an infirmary of great extent, of great beauty, excellently managed, and liberally supported, and in addition, a public dispensary. Charitable benefactions are numerous, and some of them very extensive. Bishop Saunderson was a native of this place, and the sculptor Chantrey was born at Norton, about 3 m. from the town.

Public Buildings.—Public buildings are neither numerous nor very remarkable. The town-hall is a spacious plain building, well-adapted for its intended purposes. It contains a large room where the sessions are held, apartments for the police, magistrates, a prison, &c. The roof is surmounted with a cupola containing a clock considerably elevated, the four dials illuminated; as are the clocks at two of the churches. The music-hall in Surrey-street is a large and elegant edifice in the Grecian style of architecture; it comprises on the ground floor, a room for the public library 38 feet long by 35 wide, a room for the literary and philosophical society 37 feet long by 36 wide, a reading room, and a saloon. In the higher part of the building is an elegant music room 99 feet in length and 38 in width, with a well-adapted orchestra; adjoining are a handsome saloon 38 feet long by 20 wide, with four recesses, two large refreshment rooms, and house-keeper's apartments. The theatre and assembly rooms form a large brick building, ornamented with stone, and having a central portico supporting a pediment. The Cutlers' Hall, in Church-street, is an exceedingly ornamental and commodious structure, recently completed at an expense of about £7,000. It has a handsome stone front in the Corinthian style, with two fine fluted columns, and four pilasters supporting a pediment with the arms of the corporation. The dining hall is 80 feet long and 30 broad, with dome light; assembly room, 53 feet by 25. In this hall is annually held the 'Cutlers' Feast,' over which the master presides, and to which the local and neighbouring nobility and gentry are invited. The post office, medical hall, and savings bank, are handsome public buildings. Connected with the commerce of the town are the excise-office, and an assay office, erected in 1773, where all silver articles receive the hall mark. Previously to the erection of this hall the manufacturers were under the necessity of sending all their silver goods to London for the purpose of being stamped.

Cutlery, Trade, &c.—Sheffield, from a very early period, has been famous for cutlery, arrow heads, and a kind of knife worn at that period by the lower orders in place of a sword, and known by the name of a Sheffield whittle, were fabricated here for some time. Implements of husbandry, scythes, sickles, shears, all manner of surgical and mathematical instruments, and other articles of steel followed. About 90 years since the art of plating copper with silver, in the manner now so extensively practised, was discovered at Sheffield; as was also some time afterwards the composition of Britannia metal. Manufactures in the above substances, including also a small portion of silver plate, are carried on here to an extent, and with a degree of perfection, unequalled in the world. Here are also made buttons of every variety, wires, printing types, stone grates, fenders, saws, files, boilers of all sorts and sizes, optical instruments, and in short almost every article composed of metal. The manufacture of metal itself is here a great and rapidly increasing business, particularly the refining of silver and the making of steel, of which, the kind called cast-steel especially, the house of Sanderson Brothers, at the present time, make more than what was consumed in the whole world 30 years ago, to say nothing of many other large establishments: these, as well as the above mentioned company, make blistered and shear steel also to a proportionable extent. Of this material immense quantities are shipped for the United States of America, and to the continent of Europe. Besides the above, which are the staple articles of the place, there are extensive manufactories of hair-cloth for chair bottoms. The superintendence of the staple trade was originally intrusted to twelve respectable cutlers, appointed annually at the court-leet of the lord of the manor, with power to enforce the necessary regulations for its protection and improvement. In 1624 the trade was incorporated by act of parliament, and the government invested in a master, two wardens, six searchers, and twenty-four assistants who must be freemen. These officers are elected annually, the master at the end of the year nominating one of the wardens as his successor. The wardens are always elected from among the searchers. This court had formerly power to make by-laws for the regulation of the trade, and to inflict penalties for the breach of them, over the whole district of Hallamshire and within six miles of the same; but a few years ago, this corporate jurisdiction was virtually abolished by an act of parliament, which allows any person to work at the cutlery or edgetool trades, or to become a manufacturer or dealer in the staple ware whether he has served an apprenticeship or not. The trade of the town has been greatly facilitated by its situation; the various streams in the neighbourhood formerly and still putting in motion immense machines for forging and slitting iron and steel, grinding edge-tools, polishing goods, &c. The water-wheel has, however, generally been superseded by the steam-engine; and the establishments for the grinding and polishing of cutlery are among the most striking objects of curiosity to the stranger. Many of the establishments are well worth seeing; and the show-room of Messrs Rogers, cutlers to their majesties, is a splendid museum, where all the local manufactures may be viewed in their highest styles of beauty and quality. The facilities for land and water carriage are abundant. The river Don has been almost a century ago rendered navigable to Tinsley, within three miles of the town. A canal now unites the town with the Don, forming a direct communication with the German ocean. On the basin of the canal at the western extremity of the town, is a commodious wharf where vessels load and unload under cover. Here are also spacious warehouses and offices for the transacting of business. They will contain between forty and fifty vessels of fifty tons burden, which arrive here from Hull, York, Gainsborough, Manchester, Leeds, Liverpool, and Thorn. At this last place vessels from London generally unload goods intended for Sheffield. The market days are Tuesday and Saturday; the former, chiefly for corn, is held in the corn-exchange, a handsome building erected by the duke of Norfolk, 1827, on the site of the Shrewsbury hospital under the authority of an act of parliament. Commodious shambles for the sale of butcher meat are situated in the centre of the town, including standings for the sale of butter and eggs. Fairs are held on the Tuesday in Trinity week and November 28th, for horses, cattle, and cheese. Of this last article there are sold here annually at the Nov. fair, many hundred tons, brought from the neighbouring counties of Derby, Stafford, and Lancaster.

Government, &c.—The town is within the jurisdiction of the county-magistrates, who hold meetings for the district in the town-hall every Tuesday and Friday for the determination of petty causes. The October sessions for the W. R. are held here. A court for recovery of small debts is held every third week by the steward of the manor, and a court of requests for debts not exceeding £5, the jurisdiction of which extends several miles round the parish, and sits every Thursday. By the new reform act Sheffield returns two members to parliament. The returning officer is the master cutler. Sheffield was one of the new enfranchised boroughs, and accordingly returned two representatives for the first time in December, 1832. Distance from London, 163 m. N.N.W. Pop., in 1801, of the township, 31,314; of the entire parish, 44,755: in 1831, of the former, 59,011; of the latter, 91,692. A. P. of the township, £75,217; of the entire parish, £126,542.

SHELTON, a chapelry in the parish of Stoke-upon-Trent, co. of Stafford. Living, a curacy, not in charge. Patron, the rector of Stoke-upon-Trent. This very populous township is indebted for its prosperity, if not its existence, to the potteries, of which it has upwards of 30 within its boundaries, employing nearly 3000 people. It has a number of very elegant buildings, the dwelling places of the proprietors and the managers of the works, the more ordinary erections are dwelling places of the workmen. The village is neatly paved with brick, lighted with gas, and amply supplied with water. A mechanics' institution has been recently established, under the patronage of the marquess of Stafford and Josiah Wedgewood, Esq. Races have also been for some time annually got up, and attract a very general attendance. The Trent and Mersey canal, on the banks of which are situated the numerous porcelain and Wedgewood ware works, passes through the village, affording every facility for the import of materials, provisions, &c., and for the export of the manufactured articles. The chief bailiff of the adjoining township of Hanley, in which a market is held for both townships, has the authority of calling all public meetings, &c. Being within the honour of Tutbury, Shelton is subject to a court of pleas, held there every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under £2. The potteries, and the beautiful ville of Etruria, built by the late Josiah Wedgewood, are in this chapelry. Here are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, Wesleyans of the Old and the New Connexions, Unitarians, &c. A school, called the British and Foreign, supported by subscription, is attended by upwards of 600 children. The Staffordshire infirmary stands in the immediate neighbourhood, and is of great utility in such a populous district. Elijah Fenton, the poet, was a native of this village, the house in which he was born being still carefully preserved. Distance from Newcastle-under-Lyne, 2 m. E.N.E. Pop., in 1811, 5487; in 1831, 9267. A. P. with the parish.

SHELVE, a parish in the hundred of Chirbury, co. of Salop. Living, a rector in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Hereford, rated at £9 13s. 4d., returned at £100. Church ded. to All Saints. Patron, in 1829, R. Moore, Esq. Here are some veins of lead ore, remarkable for their richness. Some of them seem to have been wrought in the time of the Romans. A weekly market, and an annual fair were formerly held here, but they have been long in desuetude. Distance from Bishop's-Castle, 7 m. N.E. Pop., in 1801, 71; in 1831, 71. A. P., £858.

SHELWICK, a township in the parish of Holmer, co. of Hereford, 2½ m. N.E. by N. from Hereford. Returns with those of the parish.

SHENINGTON, a parish in the upper division of the hundred of Tewkesbury, co. of Gloucester. Living, a rector in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester, rated at £15 3s. 4d. Church ded. to the Holy Trinity. Patrons, in 1829, Robert Dent and others. Distance from Banbury, 6½ m. W.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 300; in 1831, 453. A. P., £2,423.

SHENLEY, a parish in the hundred of Dacorum, co. of Hertford. Living, a rector in the archd. of Huntingdon and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £16 8s. 1½d. Church ded. to St Botolph. Patron, in 1829, the Rev. T. Newcome. The petty sessions for Shenley division are held here. Distance from Chipping-Barnet, 6 m. N.W. Pop., in 1801, 729; in 1831, 1167. A. P., £7,592.

SHENLEY, a parish in the hundred of Newport, co. of Buckingham. Living, a rector in the archd. of Buckingham and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £22 9s. 7d. Church ded. to St Mary. Patron, in 1829, the Rev. P. Knapp. Here is an almshouse for four men and two women endowed with £35 per annum. Distance from Fenny-Stratford, $\frac{3}{4}$ m. N.W.W. Pop., in 1801, 464; in 1831, 484. A. P., £4,460.

SHENSTONE, a parish in the south division of the hundred of Offlow, co. of Stafford. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Stafford and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, rated at £6 5s. 8d. Church ded. to St John the Baptist. Patron, Sir Robert Peel, Bart. A small school room was erected here with £27 left by a person unknown, and the school is supported by subscriptions. A fair is held here for cattle on the last Monday of February. Distance from Lichfield, $\frac{3}{4}$ m. S.W. Pop., in 1801, 1309; in 1831, 1827. A. P., £12,827.

SHENTON, a chapelry in the parish of Market-Bosworth, co. of Leicester. Living, a curacy in the archd. of Leicester and dio. of Lincoln, not in charge. Patron, the rector of Market-Bosworth. Distance from Market-Bosworth, $\frac{2}{4}$ m. S.S.W. Pop., in 1801, 177; in 1831, 200. A. P., £2,220.

SHEPHALL, a parish in the hundred of Cashio, or liberty of St Albans, co. of Hertford. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of St Albans and dio. of London, rated at £9 5s. 10d. Church ded. to St Mary. Patron, the king. Distance from Stevenage, $\frac{2}{4}$ m. S.S.E. Pop., in 1801, 120; in 1831, 217. A. P., £1,385.

SHEPHERD'S-BUSH, a hamlet in the parish of Fulham, co. of Middlesex, $\frac{3}{4}$ m. S.W. from London, formerly a common, and remarkable for the frequency of robberies committed upon it. Many fine houses are now erected upon it, and the whole is enclosed and cultivated. Returns with those of the parish.

SHEPLEY, a township in the parish of Kirk-Burton, W. R. of the co. of York, $\frac{7}{8}$ m. S.E. from Huddersfield. Pop., in 1801, 619; in 1831, 893. A. P., £1,840.

SHEPPY, an island in the co. of Kent, situated at the mouth of the Thames and Medway, being cut off from the mainland by the Swale. Its name is supposed to be derived from the great number of sheep formerly bred here. It is about 21 m. in circumference, yields abundance of corn, but is destitute of wood, and, except at Sheerness, where wells have been sunk to an immense depth, the water is very indifferent. The climate, from the quantity of marsh land in the island, is also considered unfavourable to those especially who have not been accustomed to it in early life.

SHEPPERTON, a parish in the hundred of Spelthorne, co. of Middlesex. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Middlesex and dio. of London, rated at £26. Church ded. to St Nicholas. Patron, in 1829, S. H. Russell, Esq. This parish lies along the north bank of the Thames, over which it has a bridge leading to Walton in Surrey. An ancient canoe, 12 feet long and $\frac{3}{4}$ wide, hewn out of a solid block of oak, was, 1812, dug up here in clearing out a brook communicating with the Thames. The tusk of a bear and a stag's horn were found along with it. Distance from Chertsey, $\frac{2}{4}$ m. E.S.E. Pop., in 1801, 731; in 1831, 847. A. P., £5,556.

SHEPRETH, a parish in the hundred of Wetherley, co. of Cambridge. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Ely, rated at £6 11s. 1d., returned at £105. Church ded. to All Saints. Patron, in 1829, H. Worthington, Esq. This parish is watered by the Cam. Distance from Royston, $\frac{5}{4}$ m. N.W. Pop., in 1801, 202; in 1831, 320. A. P., £1,421.

SHEPSCOMB, a chapelry in the parish of Painswick, co. of Gloucester. Living, a curacy in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester, not in charge. Patron, the vicar of Painswick. Distance from Painswick, $\frac{3}{4}$ m. E.N.E. Pop., in 1821, 725; in 1831, 803. A. P. with the parish.

SHEPTON-BEAUCHAMP, a parish in the hundred of South Petherton, co. of Somerset. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Taunton and dio. of Bath and Wells, rated at £14 8s. 11d. Church ded. to St Michael. Patrons, in 1829, Robert Dent, and others. Here is a school with a small endowment. Distance from Ilminster, $\frac{4}{4}$ m. N.E.E. Pop., in 1801, 439; in 1831, 648.

SHEPTON-MALLET, a market town and parish in the hundred of Whitstone, co. of Somerset. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Wells and dio. of Bath and Wells, rated at £33 12s. 1d. Church—in the form of a cross, with a tower at the west end surmounted by a lofty spire—ded. to St Peter and St Paul. The town, situated on a number of small elevations, consists of upwards of 20 streets and lanes, narrow and irregular, but tolerably well paved and lighted. Near the centre of the town stands the market cross, a fine old structure, erected in 1500 by Walter and Agnes Buckland. It has of late undergone a complete repair from funds left by the founders for that purpose, and considerably improved by the addition of a sixth arch to the five of which it originally consisted. It is surmounted by a lofty pyramidal spire, crowned with an oblong entablature, on which is represented our Saviour on the cross between the two thieves, with a number of saints. The carrying a bridge over a small stream that flows through the town, and the opening up of a new road, has materially improved its appearance. It has manufactures of woollen goods, silk, lace, stockings, and hair seating, which employ a great part of the inhabitants. The market days are Tuesday and Friday, the latter especially well frequented and largely supplied with all kinds of agricultural produce. Fairs are held on Easter Monday, June 18th and August 8th. The government is vested in a high constable and subordinate officers, chosen annually by the householders. Shepton-Mallet is one of the polling places in the election of the members for the eastern division of the co. Here is the county bridewell, built by prison labour, and capable of receiving from 200 to 300 prisoners. It comprises 14 wards, 15 day rooms, and 31 cells, besides workshops, tread-mills, and all the other fashionable addendas for the suppression of crime. Besides the established church, here are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, and Roman Catholics. Here is also a convent of visitation nuns, the only one in the kingdom. Its inmates are about 30. Here is a free school endowed with about £75 per annum, but there are at present no scholars on the foundation. Four poor boys are educated and apprenticed on a bequest of a Mr John Curtis, and sixteen poor girls are clothed and educated on one by a Mrs Mary Gapper. Almshouses for four poor men were founded 1699, and endowed by Mr Edward Strode with property yielding upwards of £360 per annum, £80 of which is appropriated to the repairing of the almshouses and the support of the four inmates, the remainder to the furnishing of a weekly allowance of bread for distribution among the poor of the parish. Dr Walter Chorleton, one of the original members of the royal society, author of a learned work upon Stonehenge, and president, in 1689, of the college of physicians, and Simon Browne, a learned but unfortunate dissenting divine, were natives of this town. Distance from London, 165 m. S.W. Pop., in 1801, 5104; in 1831, 5330. A. P., £12,830.

SHEPTON-MONTAGUE, a parish in the hundred of Norton-Ferris, co. of Somerset. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Wells and dio. of Bath and Wells, rated at £8 15s. Church ded. to St Peter. Patron, in 1829, the earl of Ilchester. Distance from Barton, 2½ m. S. Pop., in 1801, 365; in 1831, 452. A. P., £2,077.

SHEPWAY-CROSS, in the parish of West Hythe, co. of Kent, which gives name to one of the five divisions called lathes, into which the co. is divided. Here in old times the lord warden of the cinque ports was sworn into office, and here he held his court for determining all pleas belonging to them. The lathe to which it gives name forms the south-east division of Kent, and embraces from Dover to Kentditch, near Rye. Pop., in 1831, 25,849.

SHERATON, a township in the parish of Monk-Hesleton, co.-palatine of Durham, 11 m. N. from Stockton-upon-Tees. Pop., in 1801, 99; in 1831, 110. A. P., £1,688.

SHERBORNE, a hundred in the Sherborne division of the co. of Dorset. It lies in the north part of the co., and comprises 19 parishes. Pop., in 1831, 6878.

SHERBORNE, a market town and parish in the hundred of Sherborne, co. of Dorset. Living, a vicarage, a peculiar of the dean of Salisbury, rated at £20 4s. 7d., returned at £115 19s. 3d. The church—one of the finest in the West of England, with a tower 150 feet high containing six bells, the longest of which weighing upwards of three tons, was the gift of Cardinal Wolsey—is ded. to St Mary. Patron, the king. Sherborne, which seems to have derived its name from two Saxon words signifying a clear spring, is pleasantly situated, the principal part of it on the declivity of a hill near the border of the White-Hart Forest. It is watered by the Ivel which divides it into two parts, one of them, from the circumstance of having at one time been the site of a castle, still called Castleton. The whole is well paved, lighted by subscription, and abundantly supplied with excellent water. Formerly the woollen trade flourished here to a great extent, but has been superseded by the silk, lace, and button manufacture, in which the principal portion of the inhabitants are employed. Markets are held on Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday, and fairs on the 22d of May, 18th and 26th of July, and 10th of October. The town is within the jurisdiction of the county-magistrates, and is one of the polling places for the county members. A house of secular canons was founded here by Cenwalh, king of the West Saxons, in the year 670, and in 704, Sherborne was erected into an episcopal see by King Ina, who constituted his kinsman Aldhelm the first bishop. The secular canons were displaced in 998, by Wifin, the then bishop of the see, with the consent of King Ethelred, and Benedictines placed in their room. In 1075, the see was removed to Salisbury, and the cathedral converted into an abbey, the revenues being confirmed to the Benedictines by Pope Eugenius III. 1145. These revenues at the dissolution were estimated at £682 14s. 7d. Of the convent, all that remains are the cloister, the abbey, barn, and the refectory, which has been converted into a silk manufactory. The castle, built on a hill on the east side of the town, by Roger, the third bishop of Salisbury, being during the civil wars garrisoned for Charles I., was, after a long and resolute defence, taken by the parliamentarians under Fairfax, and by orders of parliament demolished. The ruins are still considerable. The present mansion, called Sherborne castle, the seat of the earl of Digby, was built by Sir Walter Raleigh.

Besides the established church there are here places of worship for the Society of Friends, the Independents, and the Wesleyan Methodists. The free grammar school founded by Edward VI., has an yearly income of £1200. It possesses four exhibitions of £60 per annum in either of the universities, tenable for four years only by boys on the foundation. The masters must be clergymen who have graduated at some of the universities, and the school has long maintained a high reputation. In addition to the boys on the foundation, about 50 in number, the masters have about 60 private boarders. The Blue-coat school educates 10 boys and 10 girls, and allows £5 per annum to one boy at either of the universities. Here are two charity schools, one for boys and one for girls, and the parish authorities have the privilege of sending three boys to Christ's church hospital, London. The hospital of St Augustine, re-founded by Henry VI., admits at present 24 inmates, 16 males and 8 females. In a neat chapel attached to the premises the service is read every day. Several considerable sums for relieving the various wants of the poor, bequeathed by different individuals, are at the disposal of the trustees to this hospital. Distance from London, 117 m. W.S.W. Pop., in 1801, 3159; in 1831, 4075. A. P., £13,501.

SHERBORNE, a parish in the hundred of Slaughter, co. of Gloucester. Living, a discharged vicarage with that of Windrush, in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester, rated at £15 6s. 8d. Church ded. to St Mary Magdalene.

Patron, in 1829, Lord Sherborne. James Bradley, D.D., the astronomer, was a native of this parish, born 1692, died 1762. Distance from Burford, 6 m. W.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 526; in 1831, 767. A. P., £4,224.

SHERBORNE, a parish in the Snitterfield division of the hundred of Barlichway, co. of Warwick. Living, a curacy in the archd. and dio. of Worcester, returned at £105 11s. 2d. Church ded. to All Saints. Patron, in 1829, the Rev. Elias Webb. Distance from Warwick, 3 m. S.S.W. Pop., in 1801, 176; in 1831, 241. A. P., £1,817.

SHERBORNE-ST-JOHN, a parish in the hundred of Basingstoke, Basingstoke division of the co. of Southampton. Living, a sinecure rectory and a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Winchester, rated, the former at £9 8s. 1½d., the latter at £7, returned at £120. Church ded. to St Andrew. Patron, in 1829, William Chute, Esq. At the Vine in this parish is a small chapel in which is the tomb of Chaloner Chute, Esq., speaker of the house of commons in Richard Cromwell's parliament. A school for children of both sexes here, is liberally supported by Mrs Chute and Miss Wiggatt. Distance from Basingstoke, 3 m. N.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 520; in 1831, 702. A. P., £3,460.

SHERBURN, a parish in the wapentake of Buckrose, E. R. of the co. of York. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of the E. R. and dio. of York, rated at £6 0s. 2½d., returned at £60. Church ded. to St Hilda. Patron, in 1829, Sir William Strickland, Bart. Here is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Distance from New Malton, 11½ m. E.N.E. Pop., in 1801, 288; in 1831, 536. A. P., £3,461.

SHERBURN-HOUSE, an extra-parochial liberty in the south division of Easington ward, co.-palatine of Durham. An hospital for lepers, founded and endowed here 1181, by Hugh Pudsey, bishop of Durham, is now one of the richest charitable foundations in the North of England, its income amounting to several thousand pounds per annum. In the reign of Henry VII. the society consisted of a master, several priests, and sixty-five lepers. It was incorporated by Queen Elizabeth, 1585, for a master and thirty brethren, and it is still subject to the regulations then made. The master, who must be in orders, and an A.M. at least, is appointed by the bishop of Durham, and nominates the brethren, thirty in number, who, in addition to comfortable lodgings, liberal board, and genteel clothing, receive each a handsome yearly stipend. The old hospital, which consists of neat low buildings having a hall in the centre and a wing at each end, stands on the west side of a square area of one acre. On the east side of the same area stands the mansion of the master, the apartments of the chaplain and a house for the chief farmer; on the north side stand the chapel and the new hospital, built in 1819, and containing rooms for fifteen out brethren, the inmates previous to that period having been only fifteen; on the south side of the area stand the gateway and the porter's lodge. Distance from Durham, 2½ m. E.S.E. Pop., in 1801, 80; in 1831, 59. A. P., £1,909.

SHERBURN, a parish and township partly in the liberty of St Peter of York, E. R., and partly in the upper division of the wapentake of Barkstone-Ash, W. R. of the co. of York. Living, a discharged vicarage, a peculiar of the dean and chapter of York, rated at £10 17s. 1d., returned at £130. The church, said to have been erected out of the ruins of a palace that belonged to King Athelstan, and forming a rare and beautiful specimen of ancient architecture, is ded. to All Saints. Patron, the prebendary of Fenton, in the cathedral church of York. Sherburn is a place of great antiquity, and remarkable for its fine orchards and for a particular species of plum called the wine sour, which grows in great luxuriance and is highly valued for a preserve. Flax and tessel are extensively cultivated for the Leeds market. At a short distance from the town there is a stone quarry of great value, and there are a number of corn mills on a small stream called Bishop-Dyke. There is a market on Friday but it is very little attended to, and there is an annual fair September 25th. In the time of the great civil war this was the scene of a remarkable action between the parties in which Lord Digby, who commanded for the king, was defeated with the loss of all his baggage and his cabinet of private papers which fell into the hands of the parliamentarians, and being made public had a fatal influence on the king's affairs. Here is a place of worship for the Wesleyan Methodists. An hospital and schoolhouse were erected here and endowed with a rent charge of £225 6s. 8d., by Robert Hemgate, Esq., 1619, for maintaining, clothing, and educating 24 male orphans of the parishes of Sherburn, Saxton, and Sand-Hutton, and failing, those of the city of York or elsewhere. On this foundation there are also four scholarships in St John's college, Cambridge, and the school has a right of competition for Lady Hastings' exhibition to Queen's college, Oxford. A charity school for poor girls was also liberally endowed here in 1731, by the Rev. Samuel Duffield. Distance from York, 15 m. S.W. by 8.; from London, 184 N.W. Pop., in 1801, of the town of Sherburn, 953, of the entire parish 2286; in 1831, of the former 1155, of the latter 3068. A. P. of the town, £5,546, of the entire parish, £12,618.

SHERE, a parish in the second division of the hundred of Blackheath, co. of Surrey.

Living, a rectory in the archd. of Surrey and dio. of Winchester, rated at £26 1s. 5½d. The church, having a tower and spire, is ded. to St James. SHERINGHAM, a parish in the hundred of North Erpingham, co. of Norfolk. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Norwich, certified at £16. Church ded. to All Saints. Patron, the bishop of Ely. Here was at one time a monastery of Black canons, a cell to the abbey of Nettle, Buckinghamshire. Distance from Cromer, 5½ m. W. Pop., in 1801, 392; in 1831, 699. A. P., £2,023.

SHERINGTON, a parish in the hundred of Branch and Dole, co. of Wilts. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Salisbury, rated at £11. Church ded. to St Michael. Patron, in 1829, Edmund Lambert, Esq. Distance from Hindon, 5 m. N.N.E. Pop., in 1801, 134; in 1831, 179. A. P., £969.

SHERMANBURY, a parish in the hundred of Windham and Ewhurst, rape of Bramber, co. of Sussex. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Lewes and dio. of Chichester, rated at £4 19s. 4½d. Church ded. to St Giles. Patroness, in 1829, Maria L. Challen. The springs in this parish are very generally impregnated with iron, and some of them are strongly saline. Here are still some remains, particularly the groined gateway, of the ancient castellated mansion of Ewhurst, the seat of the lords De la Warr. Distance from Steyning, 6 m. N.N.E. Pop., in 1801, 274; in 1831, 345. A. P., £1,255.

SHERMAN'S GROUNDS, an extra-parochial district in the hundred of West Goscombe, co. of Leicester. Pop., in 1811, 7; in 1831, 23.

SHERNBORNE, a parish in the hundred of Smithdon, co. of Norfolk. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich, rated at £8, returned at £70 13s. 2d. The church, supposed to have been the second founded in the kingdom, is ded. to St Peter and St Paul. Patron, the bishop of Ely. Distance from Castle-Rising, 6 m. N.N.E. Pop., in 1801, 100; in 1831, 140. A. P., £999.

SHERRARDS, a hamlet in the parish of Leigh, co. of Worcester, 7 m. S.W. from Worcester.

SHERSTON-MAGNA, a parish in the hundred of Chippenham, co. of Wilts. Living, a discharged vicarage with the rectory of Sherston-Parva, in the archd. and dio. of Salisbury, rated at £10 2s., returned at £67. The church, which is large, with a lofty tower rising from its centre, is ded. to the Holy Cross. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Gloucester. Two small streams uniting in this parish, form the Avon. A bloody battle was fought here, 1016, between Canute and Edmund Ironside. Distance from Malmesbury, 5½ m. W.S.W. Pop., in 1801, 892; in 1831, 1361. A. P., £5,816.

SHERSTON-PARVA, a parish in the hundred of Chippenham, co. of Wilts. Living, a discharged rectory united to the vicarage of Sherston-Magna, rated at £3 14s. 4½d. The church has been in ruins since 1640, at which time the patronage was in the crown. Distance from Malmesbury, 4½ m. W.S.W. Pop., in 1801, 100; in 1831, 122. A. P., £1,060.

SHIELDS (NORTH), a sea-port, township, and chapelry in the parish of Tynemouth, co. of Northumberland. Living, a curacy to the vicarage of Tynemouth, in the archd. of Northumberland and dio. of Durham, not in charge. Patron, the vicar of Tynemouth. This town, which is situated on the north bank of the Tyne, at its influx to the German ocean, has been known as a considerable fishing village since the time of Edward I., in whose reign, the prior and monks of Tynemouth, aware of the natural advantages of the place, formed a harbour, erected houses, established a market, and encouraged as settlers, tradesmen of every description. The burgesses of Newcastle, however, who claimed an exclusive right to the Tyne, brought an action against the prior in the court of king's bench, who was in consequence ordered to destroy the houses he had built, and to abandon the trade he had already created. The place, of course, relapsed into its former obscurity, till Oliver Cromwell made a second attempt to benefit the body politic, by bringing it into notice and enabling it to take advantage of its fine natural situation. The death of that great man, and the many years of misrule that succeeded, sunk it for another half century in profitless insignificance, and it was not till a period comparatively late that the foolish restraints, imposed upon it by short-sighted selfishness, were removed; even to this day, for the want of a custom-house, all vessels sailing from North Shields must clear out from Newcastle. It has, notwithstanding, become a large, populous, and flourishing town, having many spacious and airy streets, a number of elegant squares, a commodious market-place, and a harbour capable of containing two thousand sail of vessels. There is a bar in the mouth of the harbour, but at spring tide it can be safely passed by vessels of 500 ton burden. Ships of 300 tons burden are loaded and unloaded at the quay, which is spacious, and provided with every necessary apparatus for facilitating the process. The principal trade of the place is in coal, and the manufactures, with the exception of tobacco, hats, and gloves, are all connected with the supply of the shipping in the port and the different building yards. There is a weekly market on Wednesday and an annual fair on the first Friday in November. The magistrates meet every Tuesday, and a court leet and baron is held at Easter and at Michaelmas, by the steward of the manor of Tynemouth.

Besides the chapel belonging to the established church, there are here two places of worship belonging to the Methodists of the New Connexion, to the Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists, one each, to the Society of Friends, the Independents, the Presbyterians, the United Secession church, the Roman Catholics, and the Jews, one each. There is a free school on the Lancastrian plan and supported by subscription, at which about 300 children of both sexes receive the rudiments of learning, and there is another, founded and endowed 1825, by Mr Thomas Kettlewell, in which are gratuitously instructed nearly 200 boys. There is a mechanics' institution, liberally supported, a dispensary for the poor, and benefit societies are numerous. Distance from London, 279 m. N.W. Pop., in 1801, 7280; in 1831, 6744. A. P., £11,686. N.B. Considerable portions of the population of North Shields are returned under the heads of Tynemouth, Preston, and Chirton, from which the returns afford no means of separating them; the population of what constitutes properly the town of North Shields, is supposed to be upwards of 20,000.

SHIELDS (SOUTH), a sea-port, township, and chapelry, in the parish of Jarrow, co.-palatine of Durham. Living, a curacy in the archd. and dio. of Durham, certified at £66 8s. 4d. Church ded. to St Hilda. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Durham. South Shields stands on the south bank of the Tyne at its confluence with the German ocean, and like North Shields, from which it is divided by the river, has only of late years risen into importance. It consists principally of one long, narrow, and crooked street, nearly two miles in length, running along the line of the river. The higher and more modern part comprises spacious streets, elegant squares, and well built houses, and is lighted with gas. In the large square, in the centre of the town, stands the town-hall, in which are held petty-sessions on the second and fourth Wednesdays of every month. It also serves as an exchange and as a public news-room. The under part, forming a colonnade, is used as a market-place for butter, eggs, poultry, &c. A small neat theatre was built here in 1791, and literary, scientific, and mechanics' institutions, were established in 1825. Ship-building seems to constitute the principal employment of the inhabitants, but they have in addition to that, manufactories of all kinds of glass, soap works, breweries, roperies, &c. The manufacture of salt, which was at one time the sole business of the inhabitants, is now very limited, not exceeding six tons per week. The trade of the port is principally centered in the article of coals; a few vessels are engaged in the Baltic trade. The market-day is Wednesday, and there are fairs June 24th and September 1st. South Shields with Westoe now returns one member to parliament.

The Independents, the Methodists of the New Connexion, the Primitive Methodists, and the Church of the United Secession, have each a place of worship here, and the Particular Baptists, the Wesleyan Methodists, and the Presbyterians, have each two places of worship.

To the most of these places of worship, Sabbath schools are attached, and there is a charity school attended by about 120 children. There is also a dispensary for the poor, and benefit societies are numerous. The invention of the life boat originated here with a Mr Greathead, aided by some associates, who had £1,200 bestowed upon them by a parliamentary grant. The floating light off Newark Sand on the Norfolk coast, was also the invention of a native of this place, a Mr Marshall. Distance from London, 278 m. N.W. Pop., in 1801, 8108; in 1831, 9074. A. P., £12,227.

SHIFFNAL, a market-town and parish in the Shiffnal division of the hundred of Brims-tree, co. of Salop. Living, a vicarage, with the curacy of Priors-Lee annexed, in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, rated at £15 6s. 8d. Church ded. to St Andrew. Patron, in 1829, George Brooke, Esq. Situated on the great road from London to Holyhead, Shiffnal is a considerable thoroughfare, but seems, with the exception of two paper mills, to have neither manufactures nor trade. The streets are indifferently paved, but not lighted. Excellent water is obtained by digging wells of a moderate depth. Coal and ironstone are abundant in the neighbourhood, and at Priors-Lee, a chapelry in the parish, are wrought to some extent [See PRIORS-LEE]. The market-day is Tuesday, and there are fairs the 1st Monday in April, August the 5th, and November 23d. The magistrates hold a petty-session once a month and a court-leet annually. In the church is a monument to William Wakely, who was baptized here, May 1st, 1591, and buried at Adbaston, November 8th, 1714; his age being upwards of 124 years. The celebrated Dr Beddoes was a native of this town. Here are places of worship for the Baptists and Independents. Here is a free school endowed with about £30 per annum, in which about 130 children are taught upon the national system. Three exhibitions to Christ college, Oxford, are attached to this school, which, as the classics are not taught in it, are enjoyed by a private classical seminary, the master of which is nominally teacher of this school. Distance from London, 105 m. N.W. Pop., in 1801, of the town 1141, of the entire parish 3532; in 1831, of the former 1699, of the latter 4799.

SHREWSBURY,

A borough and market town, having separate jurisdiction, locally situated in the liberty of Shrewsbury, co. of Salop. It comprises the parishes of St Alkmund, a discharged vicarage, rated at £6.—St Chad's, a curacy not in charge.—St Giles, a curacy united to the vicarage of the Holy Cross, rated at £8.—St Julian, annexed to St Michael's-in-the-Castle, rated at £21, returned at £130.—St Mary's, a curacy not in charge: all, the last excepted, which is a royal peculiar, in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry. The three first are in the patronage of the crown; the fourth, in 1829, in that of Lord Berwick; and the last in that of the corporation. The church of St Alkmund's, a cruciform structure of great antiquity, was, with the exception of the tower and spire, which are 180 feet in height, taken down and rebuilt in 1795. It was made collegiate by king Edgar, who endowed it for ten canons. The old church of St Chad's having fallen while it was under repair in 1788, a new church was erected in 1792, in the Grecian style of architecture, with a handsome square tower, at an expense of £20,000. All that remains of the old church, which was formerly collegiate and a royal free chapel, is the south aisle of the chancel, which was fitted up for the performance of the funeral service, and is at present appropriated to the use of the charity school. The chapel of St Giles is part of the conventual church of the splendid abbey of Benedictines founded here (on the site of a religious house established previously to the conquest, with the revenues of which it was partly endowed,) in 1083 by Roger de Montgomery, ded. to St Peter and St Paul. This was a mitred abbey, containing the remains of St Winifred, whose shrine was honoured by the resort of many devout pilgrims. The walls of the establishment included ten acres of ground, and the buildings, principally in the Norman style, were not only extensive, but magnificent. The revenues at the dissolution were estimated at £615 4s. 3d. The chapel of St Giles belonged originally to the hospital of the abbey church. It is used for divine service only twice in the year, and has nothing remarkable about it but high antiquity. St Julian's, with the exception of the tower, has been rebuilt with brick, and contains a figure of St Julian richly enshrined in tabernacle work, and in the ceiling is preserved a portion of the ancient fret work. The east window is embellished with a painting of St James brought from Rouen during the French revolution. St Mary's, an ancient cruciform structure, partly in the Norman and partly in the early English style of architecture, having at the west end a tower surmounted by a lofty spire of the finest proportions. The east window of the chancel is filled with stained glass taken from the old church of St Chad, representing the genealogy of Christ from the root of Jesse. Each of the oval compartments, which are numerous, is filled with a king or a patriarch belonging to the ancestry of Joseph. Chapels-of-ease have been recently erected for the parishes of St Mary and St Chad, and there are places of worship for Baptists, Friends, Independents, Wesleyan and Welsh Methodists, Sandemanians, Unitarians, and Roman Catholics.

General Description.—Shrewsbury is of great antiquity, having been built by the Britons on the ruins of an ancient city called Uriconium. It is pleasantly situated on two gentle elevations on the north bank of the Severn, by one of the serpentine windings of which it is nearly surrounded. The river is crossed by two excellent stone bridges, called from their relative situations, the one the English and the other the Welsh bridge. The streets, in common with those of almost all our old cities, are irregularly formed, and often inconveniently narrow. In this respect, however, great improvements have been made of late years, and others are still in progress, whereby many obstructions will be removed and the approaches to the town rendered easy and delightful. The houses in general have the characters of a high antiquity impressed on them, though often intermixed with those of modern erection, and of elegant appearance. The streets are well paved, lighted with gas, and supplied with water from the river and from a fine spring at about two miles distance, the water of which has been brought into the town by pipes ever since the year 1774. The river water company has been only recently formed. After the churches, which we have already noticed, there are few buildings here that merit particular description. Perhaps the principal is the military depot in the suburbs, called Abbey Foregate, erected from a design by Wyatt at an expense of £10,000. It contains two large depositories for ammunition, an armoury capable of containing 25,000 stand of arms, and neat houses for the storekeeper and the armourer. A beautiful Doric column, erected by subscription in 1814, in honour of Lord Hill, 132 feet in height, having on the top a statue of his lordship, stands at the entrance into the town by the London road. A public subscription library near St John's hill, to which is attached a news room, contains upwards of 5000 volumes in the various departments of literature. A mechanics' institution has also been formed, in which lectures are occasionally delivered. A portion of the ancient palace of the princes of Powysland has been converted into a theatre, and assemblies are held monthly in a suit of rooms fitted up and appropriated to that purpose. The shire hall has been recently erected, as also a spacious market-place, and the county jail and bridewell. Races are held in September, and continued for three days. The course is on Bicton heath about two miles to the west of the town. On the south-west of the town is a field extending to upwards of 20 acres, known by the name of the quarry, and appropriated as a place of recreation for the citizens. It has some fine avenues of full grown lime trees, and affords in every season of the year a delightful and healthful promenade. The remains of the ancient castle of Shrewsbury, once a place of great importance and of great strength, consist principally of the keep, a modernized structure of red stone, the walls of the inner court, and the great arch of the inner gateway, including a grassy area, upon which, though it is now private property, the knights of the shire according to ancient usage are girt with their swords on being elected to serve in parliament. On the south side of this area, or court, is a lofty mount rising abruptly from the river, which commands a delightful view of the picturesque vale of Shrewsbury, extending 30 miles in length from north to south, and 28 in breadth from east to west, being nearly divided into two equal halves by the majestic Severn, and surrounded by lofty mountains or beautiful wood-crowned hills. Among the former may be noticed the Wrekin, the Lawley, the Caradoc, Longmyred, Stippertstones, &c.; among the latter, Grins-hills, Pymhill, Hawkstone, and Haughmond.

Trade, &c.—The trade of Shrewsbury consists chiefly in flannels, which are bought up in a rough state in the counties of Montgomery, Merioneth, and Denbigh, brought here to be finished, and hence distributed to various places in the country. At a place here called the Isle, is a mill for spinning and fulling upon a large scale, and adjoining the suburb called the Foregate, are two manufactories for thread, linen yarn, and canvass, which give employment to a great number of individuals. On the banks of the river at a short distance from the city, are the extensive iron foundries in which were cast the immense chain-work by which the suspension bridge over the Menai is supported. The town is famous for brawn, and for a particular species of sweet cake known by the name of Shrewsbury cake. The Severn, besides supplying the town with great variety of excellent fish, affords every facility to the transmission of goods of every description to Worcester, Gloucester, Bristol, and other towns connected with these great marts of commerce. The Shrewsbury canal, by which the town is supplied with excellent coal in great abundance, terminates near the Castle-Foregate, where convenient wharfs have been constructed. The market-days are Wednesday and Saturday, the latter principally for grain. The general market is held in the recently erected market-house, the corn market in a stone-building erected in 1596, having the arms of Elizabeth, in alto relievo, above the principal portal; and on each side of the central arch, pillars supporting lions with shields on their breasts, well sculptured. The building is 105 feet in length by 24 feet in width, and over the ground floor is a room of the same dimensions, appropriated formerly by the Drapers' company to the sale of flannels, now rented as a warehouse. Fairs are held February 28th, Saturday after March 15th, Wednesday after Easter week, Wednesday before Whit-Sunday, July 3d, August 12th, October 2d, and December 12th.

Government, &c.—By charter from Richard I., improved and confirmed by Charles I., the government is vested in a mayor, recorder, steward, 24 aldermen, and 48 common-councilmen, assisted by a town-clerk, chamberlain, &c. The mayor, ex-mayor, recorder, three senior aldermen, and the bishop of Lichfield and Coventry are justices of the peace for the city and liberties. The corporation hold quarterly courts of session for all offences not capital, and the mayor, assisted by some of the aldermen, holds a session every Tuesday and Friday, for determining petty causes. A court of record is held every Tuesday, at which the mayor and recorder preside, the jurisdiction of which extends over the liberties, for recovering debts to any amount. Courts-leet are held annually in May, at which constables and other inferior officers are appointed. The general quarter-sessions for the county are held here, and the assizes. The town has returned two members to parliament regularly since the time of Edward I. The freedom of the town is inherited partly by birth, or acquired by apprenticeship to a member of any of the corporated companies. Individuals born in the town or qualified by apprenticeship, may demand their enrolment as freemen on paying £6 19s. 1d.; sons or descendants of burghesses on paying £1 3s. 6d. The lord mayor is the returning officer.

Schools, &c.—Shrewsbury possesses a free grammar school founded by Edward VI. Its endowment, augmented by Queen Elizabeth, now produces £3,000 per annum. It is under the management of the bishop of Lichfield and Coventry, assisted by the mayor of the town and twelve trustees. The master and fellows of St John's college, Cambridge, appoint the masters, one of whom has a salary of £300 per annum, and the other £150. The school is open for gratuitous instruction to all sons of burghesses, and has long maintained a distinguished rank among the schools of the country. Belonging to it are four exhibitions of £70, and four of £15 each per annum, to St John's college, Cambridge; four of £60 each to Christ church college, Oxford; two of £25 each, and one of £23, to either of the universities; four scholarships of £63, and two of £40 each, with a boy fellowship of £196 per annum, in Magdalene college, Cambridge. It possesses in addition, three contingent exhibitions in the same college. Many eminent persons have been educated in this school, among which we find the names of Sir Philip Sydney, and Lord Brooke, with those of W. Wycherly, and Ambrose Philips, the one celebrated for his dramatic, and the other for his pastoral and didactic poetry. A school for instructing, clothing, and apprenticing poor children of the parish of St Julian, was founded 1724; one was erected by subscription in 1778, in which upwards of 140 boys and an equal number of girls are instructed and clothed annually. The royal Lancasterian school, in which upwards of 300 children are educated, was erected in 1812. In 1800, John Allat, chamberlain of the borough, founded and endowed a school in which are educated and clothed 20 boys and 20 girls. Coats and gowns are also distributed from this foundation annually, to a number of aged men and women. There are Sabbath schools in connexion with the different congregations in the town. Of almshouses there are eleven in the parish of St Chad's, sixteen in St Mary's, and four in St Giles's, all of them in some degree endowed, though of some of them the endowment is small. In the suburb of Frankwell is an hospital, founded 1734 by James Millington, for 12 single men or women, selected from poor housekeepers in the suburb, or from that part of the parish of St Chad which lies nearest to it. The establishment is a neat brick building with a small chapel, which is also used as a school-house in the centre. The master has a salary of £50, the mistress of £40, and the chaplain of £25 per annum. Each of the inmates receives £6 per annum with an allowance of coal and clothing; 20 boys and 20 girls are clothed, educated, and apprenticed. Each of the boys on producing a certificate of his good conduct at the end of the first year of his apprenticeship, is presented with £5, and each of the girls receives £5 at the time of being apprenticed. There is here a large house of industry, and an infirmary, supported by subscription. Convents at one time existed here of Grey, Dominican, and Augustine friars. Of the first and of the last some small remains may still be discerned. Of the second, every vestige has disappeared.

History, &c.—The history of Shrewsbury is closely connected with British history from a very early period. It was the residence of the princes of Powys, whom Offa, king of Mercia, expelled in the year 778, and to secure his conquest, reared the rude bulwark, known by the name of Offa's Dyke. After the Norman conquest, it was bestowed on Roger de Montgomery, by whom the castle was built. Robert, the son of Roger de Montgomery, having taken part with Robert duke of Normandy, in opposition to his brother Henry I, that monarch came against him with an army of 60,000 men, seized upon the castle, banished him to Normandy, and forfeited his estates. The castle of course became a royal fortress. In 1116 the nobles of the realm assembled here to do homage, and to take the oaths of allegiance to William, son of the empress Matilda. A council was assembled here by King John, to concert measures for suppressing the inroads of the Welsh; and, in 1215, Llewellyn, who had married Joan, a natural daughter of that monarch, appeared before Shrewsbury with a numerous army, to whom the town and castle was surrendered. Henry III. drove him speedily back into his own country, but in the war with the barons, Richard, earl of Pembroke, retiring into Wales, with the assistance of Llewellyn, laid waste the intermediate district, seized upon the town, which he plundered, and after putting the greater part of the inhabitants to the sword, set it on fire. The continued incursions of the Welsh, induced Edward I., in 1277, to fix his residence in Shrewsbury, to which he removed the courts of King's Bench and Exchequer. Here, in 1283, the same monarch assembled his parliament, the lords being accommodated in the castle, and the commons, who now, for the first time, had a faint voice in the national council, in a barn belonging to one of the citizens. The king and his court were accommodated at Acton-Burnell, the seat of Bishop Burnell, who was lord-chancellor; hence the laws made by this parliament have been called the statutes of Acton-Burnell. In the year previous to this, David, prince of Wales, having been betrayed into the hands of the emissaries of Edward, was sent in chains to Shrewsbury, brought to trial before the peers of England, condemned, hanged, drawn, and quartered, a piece of savage barbarity that has, ever since that period, been exercised in a greater or lesser degree, on all who have had the misfortune to fall under the sentence of treason. The feeble and unfortunate Edward II., celebrated here, in 1322, a grand tournament, which was attended by a numerous and splendid assemblage of knights and noblemen. Richard II. held a parliament here in the month of January, 1397-8, called, from the number of noblemen and others who attended, the Great Parliament. On the 20th of July, 1403, a sanguinary battle was fought in the immediate vicinity of the town between the forces of Henry IV. and the earl of Northumberland, assisted by the earl of Douglas and a considerable body of Scottish troops. It was here that the hero of Agincourt first distinguished himself. The slaughter was immense considering the number of the combatants, between 8000 and 9000 being buried on the field, which still bears the name of the Battlefield. With troops hastily levied in this town and neighbourhood, Edward, earl of March, afterwards Edward IV., gained the victory of Mortimer's Cross. On his elevation to the throne, Edward sent his queen to Shrewsbury for protection amidst the agitation of the times; and there, in the convent of the Dominicans, the princes Richard and George were born, the latter of whom died in childhood, the former, along with his elder brother Edward, murdered in the Tower by his uncle the duke of Gloucester. Henry, earl of Richmond, on his march to Bosworth, was reinforced by the citizens of Shrewsbury under Earl Talbot, and in gratitude for their seasonable assistance, after his elevation to the throne, paid with his queen a visit to the town, where he celebrated in the church of St Chad the festival of St George, and bestowed upon the citizens several distinguishing privileges. Charles I., on the breaking out of the war between him and his parliament, kept his court here for some time. Here he was joined by Prince Rupert and many other noblemen and gentlemen, and here establishing his mint, the plate of the universities and of others who were foolish enough to bestow it upon him, was coined into money, and a considerable part of it expended in extending and strengthening the fortifications of the town. It was, however, some time after assaulted by Colonel Mytton, taken by storm, and held for the parliament. It was summoned to surrender by Charles II., but refused, and by the battle of Worcester a few days after, was freed from all apprehensions of danger on his account. In 1687, James II. kept his court here for a few days, which seems to have been the last time it had the honour of being the court residence. Among many eminent men, natives of this town, we may notice Churchyard the poet, Admiral Benbow, Hugh Farmer, celebrated as a divine and critic, and Dr Charles Burney, the historian of music. SIDMOUTH, a sea-port, parish, and market-town, in the hundred of East-Budleigh, co. of Devon. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Exeter, rated at £18 15s. 5d. Church ded. to St Nicholas. Patron, in 1829, the Rev. William Jenkins. The town is situated on the north bank of the small river Sid, whence its name Sidmouth, and is nearly inclosed by two ranges of steep hills on all sides except the south, which lies open to one of the most beautiful bays of the English channel. Anciently its harbour was of some consequence, but has become choked up with sand, so as now to admit nothing larger than a fishing smack. Though somewhat irregularly built, Sidmouth is very neat, and with the numerous detached residences with which it is skirted, occupies a considerable extent of ground. The hills in which it is embosomed are extremely precipitous and highly picturesque, and though open to the sea on the south, fogs are almost unknown. The air is of course supposed to be highly salubrious, and the scenery being the most romantic to be met with on the shores of Devon, multitudes of all classes resort thither in the summer season for the benefit of sea-bathing. To meet the wants of these summer visitants, every thing has been carefully provided. Excellent inns and boarding-houses of the best description are numerous—hot baths have been erected—an elegant ball-room fitted up—two circulating libraries well stocked—an elegant walk of more than half a mile in length, constructed along the beach, with all the eteteras that are understood to be favourable for promoting health and hilarity. Markets, well supplied, are held on Tuesday and Saturday; and fairs are held on Easter-Monday, and the third Monday in September. Petty sessions are held on the first Monday of every month, and a court leet and baron annually, at which two constables and tything-men are appointed. Assemblies and concerts are frequent during the season. Formerly there was here a fort mounting four pieces of ordnance. There was also at one time here a fraternity of Augustinian monks. In the church is a monument to the memory of Dr Currie the biographer of Burns. The Baptists, Independents, and Unitarians, have each a place of worship here. A charity school on the national plan is supported by subscription, and there are a number of charitable benefactions. The Addington family take the title of Viscount from this place. Distance from Exeter, $14\frac{1}{2}$ m. E.S.E. Pop., in 1801, 1252; in 1831, 3126. A. P., £9,634.

SIGGLESTHORNE, a parish and township in the north division of the wapentake of Holderness, E. R. of the co. of York. Living, a rector in the archd. of the E. R. and dio. of York, rated at £31 1s. 3d. Church ded. to St Lawrence. Patron, the king. Here is a bequest by Marmaduke Constable, in 1810, of £16 15s. per annum, upon which fifteen children are educated. Distance from Beverley, 10 m. N.E. by E. Pop., in 1801, of the township 135, of the entire parish 392; in 1831, of the former 204, of the latter 578. A. P. of the township, £1,144, of the entire parish, £6,205.

SIGHILL, a township in the parish of Eardon, co. of Northumberland, 6 m. N.W. from North Shields. Pop., in 1801, 97; in 1831, 985. A. P. with the parish, SIGNET. See UPTON.

SIGSTON-KIRKBY, a parish and township in the wapentake of Allertonschire, N. R. of the co. of York. Living, a rector, a peculiar of the dean and chapter of Durham, rated at £12 13s. 4d. Church ded. to St Lawrence. Patron, in 1829, Sir T. Slingsby, Bart. Distance from North Allerton, 4 m. E.N.E. Pop., in 1801, of the township 115, of the entire parish 235; in 1831, of the former 131, of the latter 343. A. P. of the township £1,254, of the entire parish, £3,668.

SILCHESTER, a parish in the hundred of Holdshott, Basingstoke division of the co. of Southampton. Living, a rector in the archd. and dio. of Winchester, rated at £9 6s. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Church ded. to St Mary. Patron, the bishop of Winchester. This parish, which lies high, on the border of the county adjoining Berks, commands some admirably extensive prospects over the surrounding county. It is the site of the Caer-Segont of the Britons, the Vindonum of the Romans, and the Silchester, or great city, of the Saxons. Here the usurper Constantine was, by the soldiery, invested with the purple in 407. It was destroyed by Ælla, the Saxon, in 493, and its foundations have been ploughed up many ages ago. The walls, however, still remain in some places, 20 feet high and 24 feet in thickness. They inclose an area in the form of an irregular octagon, about a mile and a half in circumference. The foundations of the streets can still be distinctly traced running in parallel lines across the area, the four principal ones communicating with entrances on the north, south, east, and west sides. Outside the wall near the north-east angle, is an amphitheatre similar to that near Dorchester. The area serves as a pond, the wall or bank being covered with trees. Many Roman and British coins have been found here with other relics of antiquity. There is here a school endowed for five children, and the place gives the title of baron to the earl of Longford. Distance from Basingstoke, $7\frac{1}{2}$ m. N. Pop., in 1801, 311; in 1831, 414. A. P., £2,084.

SILEBY, a parish in the hundred of East Goscote, co. of Leicester. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Leicester and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £8 15s. 5d., returned at £100. The church, having a richly sculptured tower, is ded. to St Mary. Patron, in 1829, W. Pochin, Esq. This parish—bounded on the west by the river Soar—is within the honour of Tutbury. The principal manufacture is that of hosiery. Here are places of worship for the Baptists and the Methodists, and some small bequests for education. Distance from Mountsorrel, $1\frac{1}{2}$ m. E. Pop., in 1801, 1111; in 1831, 1491. A. P., £4,816.

SILFIELD, a division of the parish of Wymondham, co. of Norfolk, $1\frac{1}{2}$ m. S.E. from Wymondham. Pop., in 1801, 355; in 1831, 593. A. P. with the parish.

SILLAN, a parish in the hundred of Moeddyn, co. of Cardigan, South Wales. Living, a discharged vicarage in the dio. of St David's, rated at £15 0s. 6d. Patron, the bishop of St David's. Distance from Lampeter, $1\frac{1}{2}$ m. N. Pop., in 1801, 172; in 1831, 327. A. P., £905.

SILKSTONE, a parish and township in the wapentake of Staincross, W. R. of the co. of York. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of York, rated at £17 13s. 4d. Church ded. to All Saints. Patron, the archbishop of York. The principal manufacture is that of linen, and there are several iron foundries and wire-drawing works. There is here a benefaction for the education of poor children, worth £28 per annum. Distance from Barnsley, 4 m. W.S.W. Pop., in 1801, of the township 542, of the entire parish 6742; in 1831, of the former 1010, of the latter 16,561. A. P. of the township £2,472, of the entire parish £31,763.

Living, a curacy to the rectory of Cowby, in the archd. of Cleveland and dio. of York, certified at £12, returned at £38. Church ded. to All Saints. Patron, the rector of Cowby. Distance from Thirsk, 8 m. N.E. Pop., in 1801, of the township 74, of the entire parish 241; in 1831, of the former 111, of the latter 268. A. P. of the township £709, of the entire parish £1,895.

SILVERDALE, a chapelry in the parish of Warton, co.-palatine of Lancaster. Living, a curacy in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester, returned at £45 15s. Patron, the vicar of Warton. Distance from Lancaster, 10½ m. N.W. Pop., in 1801, 171; in 1831, 240. A. P., £467.

SILVERSTONE, a parish in the hundred of Greens-Norton, co. of Northampton. Living, a curacy, with that of Whittlebury annexed, to the rectory of Greens-Norton, in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough. Church ded. to St Michael. Distance from Towcester, 3 m. S.W. Pop., in 1801, 586; in 1831, 947. A. P., £1,106.

SILVERTON, a parish in the hundred of Hayridge, co. of Devon. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Exeter, rated at £51 8s. 4d. Church ded. to St Mary. Patron, the earl of Ilchester. A weekly market formerly held here, has been discontinued; but there are fairs on the first Thursday of March and July, and on the 4th of September. The Wesleyan Methodists have here a place of worship, and there is a free school endowed with £90 per annum, in which 70 boys are educated. Sixty girls are educated in a school supported by subscription, and an annuity of £9 10s. per annum. Distance from Columpton, 5½ m. W.S.W. Pop., in 1801, 1296; in 1831, 1369. A. P., £8,158.

SIMONBURN, a parish and township in the north-west division of Tinsedale ward, Northumberland. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Northumberland and dio. of Durham, rated at £34 6s. 3d. Church ded. to St Simon. Patrons, the governors of Greenwich hospital, who are lords of the manor. This parish was the most extensive and perhaps the most unproductive in the county, till 1814, when, pursuant to an act of parliament passed 1811, it was divided into six, all of them rectories, all of them in the gift of the hospital of Greenwich. No person can be inducted into any of these rectories, be his character and acquirements what they may, unless he has served as a chaplain in the navy for ten years, or been wounded in the service. Nor can he hold any other preferment. By a recent act of parliament, however, he is allowed to receive his half-pay. The face of the country here is mountainous and bleak; but imbedded below the surface, coal and ironstone is abundant, though it does not appear that either have as yet been turned to much account. The remains of the old castle of Simonburn have been nearly overturned in a vain search for buried treasure. They occupy an eminence shaded by tall fir and beech trees. Here is a school for the children of the poor, with a considerable endowment. Distance from Hexham, 9 m. W.N.W. Pop., in 1801, of the township 555, of the entire parish 690; in 1831, of the former 600, of the latter 1135. A. P. of the whole six parishes into which Simonburn has been divided, £43,195. Church ded. to St Sithney. Patron, the bishop of Exeter. Here is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Distance from Helstone, 2 m. N.W. Pop., in 1801, 1420; in 1881, 2772. A. P., £5,839.

SITTINGBOURNE, a parish in the hundred of Milton, lathes of Scray, co. of Kent. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury, rated at £10. Church ded. to St Michael. Patron, the archbishop of Canterbury. The town, which is of considerable length, lies along the high road to Canterbury, and is bounded on the north by Milton creek. It is celebrated for the excellence of its inns, and the entertaining of travellers seems to be the principal business of the place. It was at the Red Lion here that John Northwood, a gentleman then resident in this neighbourhood, gave an entertainment to Henry V. which cost only 9s. 9d. By charter from Elizabeth, the inhabitants were incorporated under the title of Guardian and Free Tenants, afterwards changed to that of mayor and jurats. By this charter the town had the privileges of a weekly market, two annual fairs, and the sending of two members to parliament. The latter privilege, from some unexplained circumstance, was never exercised, and the former was very soon given up, but the fairs are still held on Whit-Monday and October 10th. There is also a monthly market held on Tuesdays. Sittingbourne is one of the polling places for the members for the eastern division of the county. The Wesleyan Methodists have here a place of worship, and there is a school on the national plan supported by subscription. Distance from Maidstone, 13 m. E.N.E.; from London, 40 m. E.S.E. Pop., in 1801, 1847; in 1881, 2182. A. P., £4,368.

Church ded. to St Clement. Patron, in 1829, the earl of Scarborough. If we may believe Leland, this was once a very considerable town, having a haven and a castle surrounded with walls, which was swept away by an inundation of the sea. Distance from Spilsby, 11 m. E. Pop., in 1801, 134; in 1831, 185. A. P., £3,681.

SKELBROOKE, or SHELBROOKE, a chapel-ry in the parish of South Kirby, W. R. of the co. of York. Living, a curacy in the archd. and dio. of York, certified at £10, returned at £60. Chapel ded. to St Michael. Patron, in 1829, Sir R. Perryn, Bart. This township is part of the ancient forest of Barnsdale, occasionally the retreat of that bold outlaw, Robin Hood, whose name a well here still bears. It is further remarkable for the scene of a meeting, 1541, between Henry VIII. and the clergy of York with the archbishop at their head, who on their knees presented the truculent tyrant with £600. Distance from Pontefract, 7½ m. S.S.E. Pop., in 1801, 91; in 1831, 113. A. P., £961.

SKELLINGTHORPE, a parish in the lower division of the wapentake of Boothby-Graffo, parts of Kesteven, co. of Lincoln. SKINBURNES, a hamlet in the parish of Holme-Cultram, co. of Cumberland, pleasantly situated near Grune point, commanding an extensive view of the Solway Frith, and the mountains of Scotland. It has become a fashionable watering place, and affords excellent accommodation for visitors. The herring fishing is prosecuted here with great success. Skinburnes was anciently a large and respectable market-town; but about the beginning of the 14th century, was entirely washed away by an irruption of the sea. Its market and fair were transferred to Abbey-Holme, and the present village has arisen in place of the ancient town. Distance from Wigtou, 11 m. W.N.W. Pop. with the parish.

SKINNAND, a parish in the upper division of the wapentake of Boothby-Graffo, parts of Kesteven, co. of Lincoln. Pop., in 1801, 12; in 1831, 24. A. P., £839.

SKINNINGGROVE, a township in the parish of Brotton, N. R. of the co. of York, 8 m. N.E. from Guilsborough. It has a fishing village situated on a creek environed on all sides by lofty hills, so as to be entirely secluded from the view till you immediately approach it. Pop., in 1801, 67; in 1831, 63. A. P., £133.

SKIPLAM, a township in the parish of Kirkdale, N. R. of the co. of York, 5½ m. N.E. from Helmsley. Pop., in 1801, 70; in 1831, 124. A. P., £1,426.

SKIPSEA, a parish and township in the north division of the wapentake of Holderness, E. R. of the co. of York. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of the E. R. and dio. of York, rated at £9 16s., returned at £52. Church ded. to All Saints. Patron, the archbishop of York. This parish is bounded on the east by the sea, and it contains a lofty mount named Skipsea-Brough, which was the site of a baronial castle belonging to the lords of Holderness. Here are places of worship for the Independents and the Wesleyan Methodists. Distance from Great Driffield, 10½ m. S.E. Pop., in 1801, of the township 220, of the entire parish 516; in 1831, of the former 386, of the latter 726. A. P. of the township £1,575, of the entire parish £5,762.

SKIPTON, a township in the parish of Topcliffe, N. R. of the co. of York, 5 m. W.S.W. from Thirsk. Here is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists, and a small bequest for educating poor children. Pop., in 1801, 108; in 1831, 114. A. P., £1,144.

SKIPTON, an extensive parish and flourishing market-town in the east division of the wapentake of Staincliffe and Ewerose, W. R. co. of York. Living, a rectory and a discharged vicarage, in the archd. of the W. R. and dio. of York, the former rated at £4 0s. 10d., the latter at £10 19s. 6d. Patrons, the dean and canons of Christ church, Oxford. The town—situated in a fertile and beautiful valley near the river Aire—consists chiefly of two long and broad streets, the one at its termination being crossed by the other nearly at right angles. The paving of the streets is but indifferent; but there is an abundant supply of water, brought in pipes from a considerable distance. The houses are of stone, which is found in the immediate neighbourhood, and very neatly built. The adjacent vale is one of the richest grazing districts in England, and the surrounding heights afford many finely picturesque views. For the purposes of trade the situation of the town is highly favourable, being skirted by the Leeds and Liverpool canal, by which it communicates with these great emporiums of trade and commerce. The principal manufactures carried on are the spinning and weaving of cotton yarn, and there is a very extensive brewery for porter and ale. The market-day is Saturday. Vast quantities of corn are brought to this market, chiefly from Knaresborough-Forest. Every second Monday is a market for fat cattle; and there are fairs, March 25th, Saturdays before Palm and Easter Sundays, and 1st and 3d Tuesdays after Easter, Whitsun-eve, August 5th, and November 29d, chiefly for cattle and sheep. There is one, September 23d, for horses. A constable is appointed annually at the manorial court-leet, and the general quarter-sessions for the W. R. are held here at midsummer.

The ancient castle of Skipton, built in the reign of William the Conqueror by Robert de Romille, now the property of the earl of Thanet, stands on an eminence near the church. This fortress, in time of the wars between Charles I. and his parliament, as well as the town, was garrisoned for Charles, and in 1645 stood a vigorous siege. It was, however, at length compelled to surrender to the parliament, and in the following year was rendered untenable as a fortress, but has ever since continued a family residence. The summit of the castle commands a prospect eminently beautiful.

Besides the established church there are here places of worship for the Society of Friends, the Independents, and the Wesleyan Methodists. Here is a grammar school with an endowment of £600 per annum. The scholars on the foundation are generally about sixty. The school has two exhibitions in Christ college, Cambridge, and the scholars are eligible to the exhibitions of Elizabeth Hastings, at Queen's college, Oxford. The same benevolent individual, the Rev. William Ernystead, who endowed this school, endowed also another called Clerk's school, but the endowment, a very liberal one, has been, through the mismanagement of the trustees, nearly lost. An excellent library—bequeathed for the use of the inhabitants by Sylvester Pety—is kept in the church. The same gentleman bequeathed upwards of £24,000 for charitable purposes. George Holmes, editor of the first 17 vols. of Rymer's Fœdera, was a native of Skipton. Distance from London, 211 m. N.N.W. Pop., in 1801, of the town 2305; in 1831, 4181. A. P., £15,997, of the parish exclusive of the town. Pop., in 1801, 1856; in 1831, 2012. A. P., £9,982.

SKIRLAUGH (SOUTH), a chapelry in the parish of Swine, E. R. of the co. of York. Living, a curacy to the vicarage of Swine in the archd. of the E. R. and dio. of York, not in charge. The church—ded. to St Austin—is considered, for a small building, one of the finest specimens of Gothic architecture in the kingdom. Patron, the vicar of Swine. Marmaduke Langdale, by will made in the reign of James I., among other things, "gave and bequeathed a certayne pension for the maintenance of a schoole-master to teach schollers att South Skirlawe. Which schoole-master he requiress may be an university man, able to instruct children on the worke dayes, and able to preach the word on the holy-daies—to be no drunkard, no swearer, no blasphemour, nor eater of flesh on forbidden dayes, &c., and to be a single man unmarried. For I," says the testator, "hold itt unnecessary for a man living in so barren a place as Skirlaugh is, to have the use of a woman." Distance from Hull, 3 m. N.N.E. Pop., in 1801, 123; in 1831, 228. A. P., £1,438.

SNOWDON, a mountain in Carnarvonshire, North Wales, one of the loftiest elevations in South Britain. It forms the centre of a mountain chain, stretching in a north-easterly direction from Bardsey Island to Conway-Bay. The huge mass that goes by the name of Snowdon, is composed of a number of cliffs rising one above another, the highest of which is about 3600 feet above high water mark on the quay on Carnarvon. This peak, in a clear day, can be discerned from the coast of Ireland. It contains a very rich copper ore, and the view from its summit is of the most sublime character. The ascent, however, from the several precipices which it presents, is difficult, and in some places not a little dangerous.

SNOWSHILL, a parish in the lower division of the hundred of Kiftsgate, co. of Gloucester. Living, a curacy to the rectory of Stanton, in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester, not in charge. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Durham, rated at £3 18s. 1½d., returned at £23. Church ded. to All Saints. Patrons, the master and brethren of Sherbourne hospital. In the church is a monument to Sir John Conyers, which represents him with his feet resting upon a lion that appears to be contending with a winged dragon. In an adjoining field is still shown the grey stone where, according to the legend, the dauntless knight slew the "monstrous, venomous, and poisonous wyveron, ask, or worm, which overthrew and devoured many people in fight." (See the article NEASHAM.) The Tees runs through this parish. Distance from Darlington, 7 m. S.E. Pop., in 1801, 165; in 1831, 191. A. P., £3,809.

SODBURY-CHIPPING, a parish and market-town in the lower division of the hundred of Grumbald's-Ash, co. of Gloucester. Living, a curacy to the vicarage of Old Sodbury, in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester, endowed with £1,000. Church ded. to St John the Baptist. Patronage with the vicarage of Old Sodbury. The town is situated in a bottom on the south side of a small stream that falls into the Frome. It is a great thoroughfare on the road from Bristol to Cirencester, and one of the greatest marts in the kingdom for the sale of cheese. Many of the inhabitants carry on an extensive trade in malt. The market is on Thursday, and there are fairs the 23d and 24th of June, the Friday before Lady-day, and Michaelmas-day, for cattle, cheese, and pedlery. The town was formerly a borough, and was incorporated by Charles II., but at the request of the inhabitants the grant was annulled by proclamation of James II., 1688. Since that time it has been governed by a bailiff appointed by the lord of the manor. Here are places of worship for the Baptists and for the society of Friends, and a grammar school endowed with £20 per annum, with a free house for the master. Distance from Gloucester, 28 m. S.S.W.; from London, 113 m. S.W. Pop., in 1801, 1090; in 1831, 1306. A. P., £2,270.

SODBURY (LITTLE), a parish in the lower division of the hundred of Grumbald's-Ash, co. of Gloucester. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester, rated at £6 10s. 10d. SOGENHOE, a ruined chapel in the parish of Ufford, co. of Suffolk.

SOHAM, a market town and parish in the hundred of Staplehoe, co. of Cambridge. Living, a vicarage with the curacy of Barroway annexed, in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich, rated at £32 16s. 5½d. The church, having a tower, the upper part of which is ornamented with tessellated work composed of flints, is ded. to St Andrew. Patrons, the master and fellows of Pembroke-hall, Cambridge. The town of Soham is situated near the verge of the county, on the east bank of the Cam, is rather irregularly built, and though pretty extensive, has but a mean appearance. It has a market on Saturday, and fairs are held May 9th, for horses, cattle, and pedlery, and on the Monday before Midsummer for amusement. The parish had formerly a large meer, or fen, which has been drained, is well cultivated, and exceedingly fertile. Great attention is paid to the dairy, and cheese of a most excellent quality is the principal produce. Horticulture is also prosecuted with considerable success, and in raising the article asparagus, the gardeners here are said particularly to excel. Here was a monastery founded about 690 by St Felix the apostle and first bishop of the East Angles, which appears to have been in a flourishing condition till about 870, when it was burned and the monks put to death by the Danes under Ingvar and Ubba. Besides the established church, here are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, and Unitarians. There is an excellent free school richly endowed, and there are a few almshouses endowed with fuel but with nothing else. Distance from Ely, 5½ m. S.E.; from London, 69 m. N.N.E. Pop., in 1801, 2004; in 1831, 3667. A. P., £14,020.

SOHAM-EARL'S, or (EAST), a parish in the hundred of Loes, co. of Suffolk. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich, rated at £10. Church ded. to St Mary. Patron, in 1829, the Rev. J. H. Groome. Here was formerly a market which has gone into desuetude. A fair is held August 4th for lamb. Distance from Framlingham, 4 m. S.W. Pop., in 1801, 563; in 1831, 762. A. P., £3,261.

SOLIHULL, a market town and parish in the Solihull division of the hundred of Hemlingford, co. of Warwick. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Coventry and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, rated at £24 18s. 4d. The church—a cruciform structure of great beauty—is ded. to St Alphege. Patron, in 1829, R. B. Clive, Esq. The town—situated on the great road from Warwick to Birmingham—consists principally of one street, the houses of which are for the most part modern, well built, and many of them large and elegant. It is supplied with water from the Blythe, which runs through the east part of it, and from spring wells. The air is considered to be highly salubrious, and the surrounding country is of a pleasing character. The market day is Wednesday, and there are fairs April 29th for cattle and horses, September 11th for horses and hiring servants, and October 12th for cattle. Petty sessions are held every alternate Wednesday. Besides the established church, here are places of worship for Independents and Roman Catholics; and from various donations, bequests, &c., there is an annual sum of £317 to be expended for charitable purposes, and among others, for educating poor children belonging to the parish. The head master, who must be a graduate of one of the universities, has £100 per annum for teaching the classics, and an under master has £65 for conducting the English department. The number of scholars, who must all belong to the parish, is about 60. At this school Shenstone the poet received the rudiments of his education. Fifteen poor girls are taught upon a bequest of £8 per annum. A Benedictine nunnery in this parish at the dissolution, was valued at £21 2s. per annum. Distance from Warwick, 15 m. N.W.; from London, 106 m. N.W. Pop., in 1801, 2473; in 1831, 2878. A. P., £12,546.

SOLFACH, a small sea-port in the parish of Whitechurch, co. of Pembroke, South Wales. It is an agreeable and an improving place, and affords an excellent asylum for vessels when forced by stress of weather into the dangerous bay of St Bride. It is 3½ m. E. from St David's. Pop. with the parish.

SOLPORT, a township in the parish of Stapleton, co. of Cumberland, 9½ m. E.N.E. from Longton. Pop., in 1801, 259; in 1831, 354. A. P., £1,757.

SOMBOURN (KING'S), a parish in the hundred of King's-Sombourn, Andover division of the co. of Southampton. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Winchester, rated at £21 1s. 10½d. Church—containing some very ancient monuments—ded. to St Peter and St Paul. Patron, in 1829, Sir Charles Mill, Bart. By the Andover canal, which passes through this parish, chalk is carried in large quantities to Redbridge, where it is used as manure upon the strong clay soil in the New-Forest. The women and children of the village are, a number of them, employed in spinning silk for the Winchester manufacturers. Before the conquest this place was held in royal demesne, and now forms part of the duchy of Lancaster. Here John of Gaunt had a palace. The palace has disappeared, but the gardens, pleasure-grounds, fish-ponds, &c., can still be traced, and the stables which belonged to it have been con-

SOMERSALL-HERBERT, a parish in the hundred of Appletree, co. of Derby. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Derby and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, rated at £4 18s. 10d. Church ded. to St Peter. Patron, in 1829, the earl of Chesterfield. Distance from Uttoxeter, 8½ m. E.N.E. Pop., in 1801, 88; in 1831, 117. A. P., £1,082.

SOMERSBY, a parish in the hundred of Hill, parts of Lindsey, co. of Lincoln. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £4 16s. 5½d., returned at £80. Church ded. to St Margaret. Patron, in 1829, R. Burton, Esq. Distance from Spilsby, 6 m. N.W. Pop., in 1801, 76; in 1831, 69. A. P., £1,050.

SOMERSET,

A maritime co., bounded on the north-east, north, and north-west, by Gloucestershire and the Bristol channel; on the east by Wilts and Dorsetshires; and on the south, south-west, and west, by Dorset and Devonshires. Its extreme length from east to west is about 65 m., and its extreme breadth from north to south about 45 m. Its superficies has been calculated at 1642 square miles, or 1,050,880 statute acres, of which about 400,000 are supposed to be in tillage, and about 534,500 in pasturage, the remainder being woods, waters, &c.

Divisions.—For the sake of perspicuity this co. has generally been described as forming three divisions or districts; the first comprehending that division of the county lying between the harbours of Uphill and Kingroad, on the north-west, and the towns of Bath and Frome on the south-east, having the Avon for its eastern, and the Mendip hills for its western boundary;—the second, comprising the entire middle portion of the co. from the confines of Wilts and Dorsetshires on the south, to the Bristol channel on the north, having the Mendip hills for its eastern, the Quantock hills and the forest of Neroche for its western boundary;—and the third, that portion of the co. lying to the west of the Quantock hills and the Forest of Neroche.

First Division.—The aspect of the first division is for the most part delightfully varied by hills of considerable elevation, overlooking cultivated plains of the richest fertility. There are, however, especially in the north-west corner of this division, extensive tracts of what are called low moorlands, which are subject to inundations, and that sometimes for months in succession. Upwards of 3000 acres of this description—lying in the parishes of Congresbury, Churchill, Puxton, &c.—are under the inspection of a commission of sewers, and discharge their waters into the small river Yeo. Cleared of stagnant water, the produce of this tract, especially in grass, is luxuriant beyond conception. The difficulty of keeping this district above water, will be readily apprehended by every reader when he is told that every ordinary spring-tide rises five feet above its level. To the N.N.E. of this, lie upwards of 4000 acres equally subject to the watery element. This tract is defended from the inroads of the sea by a stone wall rising to the height of 10 feet above the level of the lands. High tides frequently flow over this wall, and it is sometimes broken by the strength of the waves, and hundreds of acres laid at once under water. Land floods are also frequent. This tract discharges its waters by two small streams called the Yeos, the mouths of which are defended by sluices. To the north-east of this low tract, Leigh-Down, consisting of nearly 3000 acres, extends from the sea coast to Bristol; and to the south of this lies a beautiful vale of rich grass lands. The Mendip hills run along the west side of this division in a direction N.N.W., from near Frome on the S. to Black Rock near Uphill on the Bristol channel, a distance of nearly 30 m.

Middle Division.—Of the middle division the lands bordering on Wilts and Dorsetshires lie high, and are principally occupied as sheep walks. A little more to the north, round the towns of Shepton, Bruton, Castlecary, Ilchester, Petherton, Ilminster, Langport, and Somerton, the country is highly productive and finely laid out in rich corn fields, flourishing orchards, and luxuriant meadows. To the north lie the fen lands, divided by the Polden hills into two districts, called the Brent and the Bridgewater, or the South Marishes. Of the Brent Marsh upwards of 20,000 acres have been drained and converted into rich dairy lands. The water is carried off by the Brue which flows through the middle of the marsh, and has a barrier against the tide with sluices at Highbidge. Large tracts of turf bog still remain, upon which little improvement has yet been made. It is a curious fact that the principal bogs of this extensive flat, lying one on each side of the river a little to the westward of Glastonbury, and extending to several thousand acres, are from five to six feet higher than the adjoining lands. They consist of a mass of porous earth, saturated with, and floating in water. All divisions of land here are made by ditches of about five feet deep, which discharge their waters into the river. Sluices are occasionally formed on them to keep back the water in the time of drought, for the use of the cattle. The Bridgewater or South Marsh, is separated from the Brent Marsh by the Polden hills, having the Ham hill on the south-east, the river Parret on the south-west, and on the north-west, Bridgewater bay. The principal drain of this marsh is the Parret; but it has no barrier against the tides, in consequence of which, in rainy seasons especially, many thousand acres are laid under water, which destroys the herbage and imparts to the atmosphere disagreeable and unwholesome qualities. These tracts in the early period of our history seem to have been subjected to constantly recurring inundations of the sea. In the beginning of the fourteenth century they were placed under a commission of sewers, with power to inspect the sea banks, ditches, gutters, &c., to order whatever repairs they supposed necessary, and to assess the proprietors to that effect. A commission of the same kind still continues, and tracts in the south marsh have been recently drained, extending to upwards of 20,000 acres.

South-west Division.—In the south-west division lies the rich vale of Taunton-Dean, comprising 30 parishes, with the market-towns of Taunton, Wellington, and Milverton. At the north of this vale, extending north-west to the Bristol channel, lie the Quantock hills, and more to the westward those of Brendon, Grabbist, Winsford, Lucott, Staddon, and Dunkerry-Beacon, all of them remarkable for picturesque scenery, and the fine prospects to be obtained from them. On the west lies the dreary forest of Exmoor, which extends into Devonshire, a bleak and sterile region, in which for many miles, only one dwelling house, Simonsbath, surrounded with about 200 acres of enclosed land, is to be met with. A solitary red deer may be sometimes seen, and though it has the name of a forest, a thorn bush or a few straggling willows on the margin of a brook, is all that it affords in the shape of trees. The hills of this county are remarkable for a smooth undulating outline, seldom presenting cliffs or precipitous ascents except on the sea coast. Some of their sides too are finely wooded, and on a few are bogs of a considerable extent. Dunkerry-Beacon, the loftiest elevation in the county, is 1668 feet above the level of the sea.

Rivers.—The rivers are numerous though none of them are very considerable, most of them having their rise and whole course within the county. The principal is the Parret, which rising on the borders of Dorsetshire flows northward, being near Muchelney joined by the Ille, at Langport by the Yeo or Irel, and afterwards by the Tone, and passing the town of Bridgewater, falls by a winding course into the Bristol channel. The Brue has its source in the forest of Selwood, on the borders of Wiltshire, and passing by Bruton and Glastonbury, is augmented by a considerable stream from Shepton-Mallet and Wells, and falls into the Bristol channel a little to the north of the Parret. The Ax has its source among the Mendip hills, and passing by Axbridge falls into the Bristol channel near Black Rock. The Exe has its source in the Forest of Exmoor, but taking a southern direction enters Devonshire, of which it forms one of the principal rivers. A few inconsiderable streams fall into the Lower Avon, which forms the boundary between this county and the county of Gloucester. The fish taken in these rivers are salmon, trout, pike, perch, roach, dace, eels, carp, and gudgeons.

Soil, &c.—Though this county stands pre-eminent in point of fertility, almost every variety of soil may be found within its limits. That of the moorlands of the N.E. division, a marine deposit, is a deep and rich mixture of clay and sand. That of the moors or marshes of the middle district is various. The most valuable is a strong dry clay of considerable depth. That which is supposed next in quality is a red earth, varying in depth from one to six feet. Black moory earth, having a substratum of clay at various depths, is a third kind of soil found here; and there is a fourth called turf-bog, porous and spongy, and so full of the fibrous roots of plants as to be with difficulty cut with a spade; under this lies a stratum of black earth, covering a bed of peat full of leaves and the stalks of rushes, together with bituminous matter, and from three to fifteen feet in depth. This serves as the common fuel to the district. To the south of this level lies an elevated tract of great fertility, composed chiefly of sea sand and shells. The celebrated vale of Taunton-Dean is a rich loam interspersed in some places with clay, in others with sand, a kind of soil that seems to predominate in the valleys of the western division. Of the downs and hills the soil is various; that of Leigh and Broadfield Downs is thin and gravelly, lying upon limestone that often approaches to within three inches of the surface. On the White and Black Downs it is various, but generally thin, resting on sand or gravel. On the Mendip hills it is often a deep loam interspersed with light, spongy, and black tracts, and occasionally intermingled with gravel, clay, &c., by which its fertility is affected in various degrees. On the Polden and Ham hills the soil is thin and of a very inferior quality. On the Quantock hills it is also thin, resting in some parts on a thin shelvy rock, and in others on limestone. Like the soil, the climate has considerable variety. On the sea coast it is mild even in winter, and in the vale of Taunton, and the level districts towards the east and south, it is equally temperate. On the hills, especially those of Mendip, the winter is cold and stormy. In the marshes the air is moist, and the whole county is sometimes enveloped in dense fogs. In summer the air, especially on the hills, is clear, salubrious, and invigorating. In the vales the crops are sometimes blighted by frosts in April and May, while on the hills they remain uninjured. Yet the harvest is nearly a month later on the hills than in the valleys. From the contiguity of the Bristol channel the air on these eminences seems to imbibe in autumn a watery vapour, highly unfavourable for the ripening of grain, and large tracts are in consequence pastured that might otherwise be more properly employed in tillage.

The crops most commonly cultivated are wheat, barley, and oats, with beans and pease. The produce varies greatly in the different districts. On the rising lands to the south of Bridgewater-marsh wheat is grown of a very superior quality. The same district is supposed to produce the best barley grown in the county. The potatoe is extensively cultivated in different districts, especially on the fertile soils in the neighbourhood of Castle Cary, where the produce is commonly 160 sacks per acre. Turnips are extensively cultivated in the middle district. Flax and hemp are grown extensively in the rich tract extending along the south side of the county from Wincanton by Yeovil to Crewkerne. Tassel, a plant somewhat resembling a thistle, the head of which, being composed of well turned hooks, is used in the dressing of broad cloth, is extensively cultivated in the north-eastern district. It requires a strong rich clay soil, and the produce is very uncertain. Gardens are numerous in the vicinity of Somerton, from which the surrounding markets, as far as Wells and Shepton-Mallet, are supplied with early pease, beans, potatoes, &c. Orchards are numerous, and those that have a northern aspect and are sheltered from the westerly winds are generally very productive. Along the northern base of the Mendip hills the fruit yields a strong and very palatable cider, and in the vale of Taunton-Dean cider is made of the very best quality. The manufactures of Somerset and Wiltshire are supplied principally from the parishes of Blagdon, Compton-Martin, Harptree, Wrington, and Ubley. Large quantities are also sent into Yorkshire by Bristol. Turkey rhubarb is cultivated in a few places, but not extensively. In the vicinity of Keynsham-wood it is grown to some extent. Three or four crops are commonly gathered in the season, the average produce being about a ton and a half per acre. The quality is excellent. The artificial grasses most commonly cultivated are broad clover, white Dutch clover, sanfoin, marlgrass, and rye grass. The marl-grass grows spontaneously upon the marl soils, and has a striking resemblance to broad, or red clover. Husbandry does not appear to be in the most improved state. In the western parts of the county corn is carried in from the fields upon horses' backs, and manure is carried abroad in the same manner. The apology for this slovenly procedure is the unevenness of the country and the steepness of the hills—the true reason most probably is, a blind adherence to ancient custom, known in Scotland by the name of 'use and wont.' Lime is the principal manure, for which marl serves as a substitute where it is found of good quality.

On the Brue, the marsh farmers generally have openings cut in the banks of the river, by which they convey the muddy water descending from the hills over their lands, which is found to have an amazingly fertilizing influence. Corn, however, is not produced in sufficient quantity for the supply of the county, many thousand quarters being annually imported from the adjoining counties of Dorset and Wilts. Stone fences are common in those parts of the county where stone is abundant, but they are more generally white thorn, in some places beech, which is most beautiful to the eye, and affords annually a considerable supply of fuel.

Though somewhat deficient in corn, this county has a superabundance of cattle, and overflows with the rich products of the dairy. Almost the whole of the immense and rich tracts of marshland are in grass, and when not chilled by excessive rains, or inundated by the tides, are in perpetual verdure, feeding vast herds of oxen, many milk cows, and flocks of sheep. The sheep and oxen when fattened, with large quantities of butter and cheese produced from the cows upon the dairy farms, are sent chiefly to the Bristol, Salisbury, and London markets. In the north-western part of the county, where the dairy system prevails, the cows are mostly of the short horned breed. In the vale of Taunton-Dean they are of the north Devon breed, which is held in high esteem by the graziers. Of the whole western district the oxen are remarkable for symmetry, and almost all of a red colour. They are put into the yoke at three years old, and generally worked till they are six, when they are sold to the graziers. The summer fattened oxen are all, or nearly all, of this breed; the winter fattened are of an inferior kind, partly home bred and partly imported from Wales. Of sheep, the breeds here, like the cattle, are various. In the vicinity of Bath is a large breed, weighing, when fattened, from 30 to 40 lbs. per quarter. On the Mendip hills there is a native and hardy breed, easily subsisted, having fine wool, and affording most delicious mutton. In the middle district, especially the southern parts of it, are immense flocks of an improved sort, raised from the Dorsetshire breed. Of these, many are fed in the marshes along with some from the Mendip hills, and great numbers imported from Dorsetshire. The Dorsetshire breed are general in the vale of Taunton-Dean. A native breed, without horns, well made, and having a thick fleece weighing from 7 to 8 lbs., is found about Dulverton, Bampton, and Wiveliscombe, and highly prized by the marsh graziers. Fattened, the carcase weighs generally about 25 lbs. per quarter. A small horned breed from Devonshire is preferred in the hilly portions of the western district, where they are kept for years solely for the fleece, which is fine, but does not weigh above 4 lbs. These, when fattened, weigh from 14 to 18 lbs. per quarter. Hogs, in the dairy districts, are fed in immense numbers, principally on whey, and their flesh is of a fine colour and delicate flavour. They are procured chiefly from the Bristol market, and are of all kinds to be found in the surrounding counties, many of them being brought from Wales. Few or no horses, the ponies on Exmoor excepted, are bred in the county, the demand being supplied by the dealers from the great horse markets in the northern counties. Innumerable geese are reared in the marsh districts, and the rearing and feeding of all kinds of fowls in the districts adjoining to Bath and Bristol especially, form an important part of rural economy.

Upwards of 20,000 acres of the county are occupied by wood, some of them of great value, and many thousand acres still lie uncultivated wastes. King's-wood, chiefly oak, covers between 200 and 300 acres, and on the northern declivity of the Mendip hills are a number of beautifully picturesque and thriving coppices. There are also several spread along the opposite declivity, but being exposed to the south-west wind, they are less thriving and far less picturesque. The woods of Mells, Leigh, Edford, Harwich, Compton, and Cameley, are extensive, and from their vicinity to the collieries, sources of much profit to the owners. The vales of the eastern district are richly adorned with detached elms, which grow to an immense size; and in the midland district a chain of woodlands extends for several miles through the parishes of Downhead, Claford, Whatley, &c. The forest of Selwood, on the borders of Wiltshire, which extended over a vale of 20,000 acres, has been cleared and cultivated, with the exception of about 2000 acres, which continue in coppice woods, the chief sorts of timber being oak and ash, the underwood hazel, alder, willow, and birch. The marsh lands have few trees of any kind. In the western district, on the declivities of the hills, are numerous coppices, chiefly of oak, and in the hedgerows elms are generally found of large size. The principal wastes, or unenclosed commons, are Leigh-down, an extensive tract to the west of Bristol, subject to a right of commonage and depastured chiefly with sheep; Broadfield-down, and Lansdown, the former extending to 2000 acres, the latter to 1000, having a fine smooth surface, and considered as peculiarly fitted for sheep walks; nearly one-half of the ancient royal forest of Mendip, extending to several miles, covered with heath and fern, and affording subsistence to numerous flocks of sheep; the forest of Neroche, near Ilminster, containing nearly 1000 acres, on which different parishes have an untinted right of commonage; White-down, near Chard; many thousand acres in the marshes; part of Black-down and several hundred acres on the Quantock and Brandon hills; and on the western extremity of the county the forest of Exmoor, extending to 20,000 acres, without a single house upon it except Simonsbath, nearly in the centre of it, which is licensed as an inn, and has around it enclosures to the extent of 200 acres. On this bleak moor about 22,000 sheep belonging to farmers in the surrounding country, are depastured during the summer, and about 400 small horses all the year round. When the snow begins to lie deep, these hardy little animals may be seen in droves traversing the narrow valleys, and picking a scanty subsistence along the margin of the brooks and by the un-frozen springs, but the sheep are all driven off before the severity of winter approaches. Of these fine little ponies the forester has regularly a public sale every year at Simonsbath, where also, in the month of May, he meets with the farmers from the surrounding country to register the number of sheep which each intends to send into the forest for the season. The hills of the Black-down are pastured during the summer months with young cattle, the property of the neighbouring farmers.

Minerals, &c.—The mineral productions of the county are coal, lead, copper, calamine, manganese, limestone, freestone, ironstone, fine grained slate, &c. Fuller's earth and ochre are occasionally met with, and in the neighbourhood of Chilcompton, a rich black marl in inexhaustible abundance. The coal beds of this county constitute the most southern deposit, and lie nearer to London than any that have yet been discovered in England. The most extensive collieries seem to be those of the parishes of High-Littleton, Timsbury, Poulton, Radstock, and Midsummer-Norton, in which upwards of 1500 men and boys are constantly employed. The coal here is of excellent quality, of a firm and strong grain, making a clear and durable fire. Bath is the principal market for its consumption. There are also extensive collieries in the vicinity of Leigh-down, to the west of Bristol, whence that city is partly supplied with the necessary article of fuel, and whence considerable supplies are sent into Wales. The Mendip hills, consisting of mountain limestone, are famous for their mines of lead and lapis calaminaris. The former, however, have been nearly exhausted, or are so incumbered, as to be wrought with little advantage; the latter seem to be prosecuted with great vigour, and to be as profitable as ever. In the three parishes of Rowberrow, Shipham, and Wincombe, 500 miners are constantly employed in raising that mineral, which is often found within a yard of the surface, and is seldom worked deeper than 30 fathoms. These mines are governed by regulations made in the reign of Edward IV., commonly called Lord Choke's laws. According to these, every miner is entitled to turn upon the forest, in summer, as many cows as he can keep through the winter; but before he breaks ground, he must have license from the lord of the soil, or from his officers, and he must pay to the said lord, a tenth part of the ore, and also a tenth part of the lead, if it is smelted on his territory. Every lord of the soil is required to hold a minor court twice in the year, and to swear in 12 miners, who act as a jury, for the redress of misdemeanors. The lord may issue arrests for strife between man and man respecting their works, or for the payment of their own dues; and if a miner, by the falling in of the earth, or any other accident, meets his death, his fellow miners are obliged to bring him to Christian burial at their own proper cost and charges, no coroner or other officer being allowed to have any thing to do with him in any respect. Iron ore, and beds of ironstone, are found in various places; and in the rocks near Porlock have been found small quantities of silver. Granite has been quarried a few miles to the N.E. of Taunton; and at Coombo-Down, in raising a very fine freestone, the ground has been undermined for several miles. In a county possessing so many minerals, mineral springs must be frequently met with. The most celebrated are the hot wells of Bath, for an account of which, see BATH.

Manufactures.—The principal manufactures are those of woollen and worsted goods, carried on chiefly at Frome, Taunton, Wellington, and Wiveliscombe; gloves, at Yeovil, Marlcock, and Stoke; lace, at Chard and Taunton; silk, at Bruton, Torrington, and Shepton-Mallet; crape, chiefly at Taunton; and stockings at Shepton-Mallet. Iron and copper mills are numerous on the lower Avon; as also for spinning worsted and spinning and weaving cotton. At Minehead, Porlock, and Watchet, are very productive salmon and herring fisheries, which give employment to a number of the inhabitants. Off the coast, generally, are taken sand-dabs, flounders, trakes, pipers, soles, plaice, skate, conger-eels, shrimps, prawns, crabs, muscles, and star-fish.

History.—At the time of the Conquest, this county seems to have been occupied by the Belgæ, who are supposed to have migrated hither out of Gaul, some three centuries before the Christian era. Under the Romans it was included in Britannia prima. On the retreat of that people from the kingdom, this county became the scene of a protracted and sanguinary contention between the Saxons and the Britons, who were gradually driven into the mountain fastnesses of Wales. A battle, in 845, was obstinately contested at Stoke-Courcey, between the Saxons, commanded by Elstan, bishop of Sherborne, and the Danes, who were totally routed. In the reign of Alfred, these savage marauders having nearly devastated every other part of the kingdom, extended their ravages into this county, where, in 873, they destroyed Glastonbury. In 877, Somerton shared a similar fate. In this county Alfred, being totally routed, took refuge, and for a time concealed himself in the cottage of a neatherd, situated on a small plat of ground at the confluence of the Parret and the Tone, nearly surrounded with water and impassable marshes. Here he collected a few faithful adherents, with whom he made frequent, sudden, and successful excursions upon the Danes, in consequence of which, a general rendezvous of the Saxons was appointed at Egbert's-Stone, on the east side of the Forest of Selwood, in the vicinity of Frome, whence they were led to the great victory of Ethandune, in Wiltshire. After the subjugating of those pagans, their leader, Guthrum, was brought to the court of Alfred, at Aller, on the banks of the Parret, where he received the rite of baptism in that year. In gratitude for his successes, Alfred, on the site of his hiding-place, called in Saxon Ethelninge, or the Isle of the Nobles, now Athelney, founded a monastery to the honour of our Saviour and his Apostle St Peter. In 918, Somerset was again attacked by the Danes, hands of whom landed at Porlock and at Watchet, when they were bravely met by the inhabitants, and, with immense slaughter, driven on board their ships. Watchet was attacked and plundered by them in 987, and again in 997, when it was burned to the ground. With the same insatiate plunderers several battles were fought at Pen, in this county, in 1001, and 1016. In 1052, Harold, afterwards king of England, returning from banishment, landed in this county, over a great part of which he carried fire and sword, after which he returned to his ships with a great booty. During the insurrection against William Rufus, headed by Odo, bishop of Baieux, in favour of Robert, duke of Normandy, the city of Bath was taken and plundered by the insurgents. From this period nothing remarkable occurs in the history of the country till 1607, when a tract of country, 24 miles in length, and 4 in breadth, was overflowed by an irruption of the sea, and many of the inhabitants drowned. In the struggle between Charles I. and his parliament, the royal party being strong in Somersetshire, it was the scene of active and long-continued warfare. It was also the scene of the ill-planned and feebly conducted attempt of the duke of Monmouth in 1685; and at Wincanton, shortly after the landing of the prince of Orange at Torbay in 1688, a party of the royal guards were attacked, and a number of them put to the sword, being one of the very few instances in which blood was shed in the progress of that singularly fortunate revolution.

Antiquities.—The remains of antiquity are numerous and of great variety. They will be found described under the different parishes and townships in which they are situated, as will also the different religious houses, 44 in all, that belonged to the county.

Hundreds, &c.—Somersetshire is co-extensive with the diocese of Bath and Wells, and is divided into three archdeaconries—Bath, Wells, and Taunton. It has 469 parishes, whereof 241 are rectories, 138 vicarages, and the remainder curacies. It is divided into 43 hundreds, has two cities, Bath and Wells, and 27 market-towns. By the reform act it sends four members for the county—two for the eastern and two for the western division. Somerset is included in the western circuit. The summer assizes are held alternately at Bridgewater and Wells, the Lent, at Taunton. Quarter sessions are held at Wells in January and April, at Bridgewater in July, and at Taunton in October. Pop., in 1801, 273,750; in 1831, 402,500. A. P., £1,900,651.

SOMERSHAM, a market-town and parish in the hundred of Hurstingstone, co. of Huntingdon. Living, a rectory with the curacies of Colne and Pidley, in the archd. of Huntingdon and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £40 4s. 7d., and annexed to the regius professorship of Divinity in Cambridge. Church ded. to St John the Baptist. Somersham—supposed to derive its name from having been a summer camp of the Romans—is situated in a pleasant and fertile county, abounding with springs remarkable for the purity and salubrity of their waters. It consists principally of one street, running east and west, nearly a mile in length. The preparing of wicks for rush lights, which are extensively transmitted to various places of the kingdom, furnish employment for a number of the inhabitants. The market, which was on Friday, has been long discontinued; but there are fairs, June 23d and January 12th. Here was at one time a splendid palace belonging to the bishop of Ely: not a vestige of it now remains. There is a place of worship belonging to the Baptists, and a free school with a considerable endowment. Distance from Huntingdon, 8½ m. E.N.E. Pop., in 1801, 833; in 1831, 1402. A. P., £8,229.

SOMERSHAM, a parish in the hundred of Boosmere and Claydon, co. of Suffolk. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich, rated at £8. Church ded. to St Mary. Patroness, in 1829, Mrs Stubbin. Here is a place of worship for the Independents. Distance from Ipswich, 6 m. W.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 298; in 1831, 446. A. P., £1,252.

SOMERS-TOWN. See ST PANCRAS.

SOMERTON, a hundred in the co. of Somerset. It lies in the centre of the co., and comprises nine parishes, with the market-town of Somerton. Pop., in 1831, 5452.

SOMERTON, a market-town and parish in the hundred of Somerton, co. of Somerset. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Wells and dio. of Bath and Wells, rated at £16 0s. 7½d. Church—an ancient structure with an octagonal embattled tower—ded. to St Michael. Patron, in 1829, the earl of Ilchester. The very ancient and once royal town of Somerton, is situated near the centre of the county, in a pleasant and fertile spot a little to the west of the river Carey, over which it has a good stone bridge. Ina, with several of his successors, kings of the West Saxons, frequently held their courts here. The castle, which was the royal residence, was subsequently converted into a state-prison, where many distinguished personages, and, among others, John, king of France in the reign of Edward III., have been reluctant residents. It is now the site of the goal, which was constructed out of the materials of the ancient edifice. The houses here are low, but they are built of stone, and the streets are well paved. There is a market here every Tuesday; and there are fairs on the Tuesday in Passion week, and the 3d, 6th, 9th, and 12th Tuesdays following, for cattle; and for cattle, hogs, &c. &c., on the 30th of September and the 8th of November. The town is governed by a bailiff and constables, chosen by the inhabitants. The Independents have here a place of worship, and there is an excellent free school, and an endowed almshouse for eight poor women. Distance from Ilchester, 5 m. N.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 1145; in 1831, 1786. A. P., £6,049.

SOMERTON, a parish in the hundred of Babergh, co. of Suffolk. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich, rated at £6 16s. 8d. Church ded. to St Margaret. Patron, in 1829, the marquess of Devonshire.

SOMERTON, a parish in the hundred of Ploughley, co. of Oxford. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Oxford, rated at £15 1s. 10½d. Church ded. to St James. Patron, in 1829, the Rev. H. Wintle. Here is a free school for 15 boys, and another for girls, endowed by the countess of Jersey with £20 per annum. The Cherwell has its course through this parish, as also the Oxford and Birmingham canal. There is within the limits of the parish a powerfully petrifying spring, so copious, as to form of itself a small cascade. Distance from Deddington, 3½ m. S.E. Pop., in 1801, 254; in 1831, 392. A. P., £3,437.

SOMERTON (EAST), a parish in the hundred of West Flegg, co. of Norfolk. Living, a curacy to the rectory of Winterton, in the archd. and dio. of Norwich, not in charge. Church—which has long ago been demolished—was ded. to St Mary. Patronage with the rectory of Winterton. Distance from Caistor, 6 m. N.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 95; in 1831, 54. A. P., £1,049.

SOMERTON (WEST), a parish in the hundred of West Flegg, co. of Norfolk. Living, a curacy in the archd. and dio. of Norwich, certified at £16, returned at £30. Church ded. to St Mary. Patron, in 1829, Thomas Greves, Esq. Distance from Caistor, 6½ m. N.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 162; in 1831, 243. A. P., £1,104.

SOMPLING, a parish in the hundred of Brightford, rape of Bramber, co. of Sussex. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Chichester, rated at £8 7s. The church—which has been recently enlarged by the aid of the incorporated society for the enlargement of churches and chapels—has a curious tower at the west end, apparently of a more ancient date than the church itself. Patron, in 1829, E. Barker, Esq. Distance from Worthing, 2 m. E.N.E. Pop., in 1801, 405; in 1831, 519. A. P., £2,252.

SONNING, a hundred in the co. of Berks. It lies in the east end of the county and comprises six parishes, including the borough of Wokingham. Pop., in 1831, 5835.

SONNING, a parish partly in the hundred of Binfield, co. of Oxford, but chiefly in the hundred of Sonning, co. of Berks. Living, a vicarage, a peculiar of the dean of Salisbury, rated at £26 7s. 1d. Church ded. to St Andrew. Patron, the dean of Salisbury. The village of Sonning is situated on the Thames. It is very ancient, and is said to have been at one time the seat of a bishop's see. It has a free school, founded in 1666 by Sir Thomas Rich, and endowed with an estate yielding upwards of £50 per annum, for educating and clothing twenty boys and apprenticing three of them annually in London, to which was added in 1709, a rent charge of £5, for placing out an additional apprentice. Distance from Reading, 2½ m. E.N.E. Pop., in 1801, of that part of the parish which is in the co. of Oxford, 705, in the co. of Berks, 1233, total 1938; in 1831, of the former, 887, of the latter, 1701, total, 2588. A. P. of the Oxford division, £3,296, of the Berkshire, £6,000, total £9,296.

SOOTHILL, a township in the parish of Dewsbury, W. R., co. of York, 6 m. W.N.W.

from Wakefield. Pop., in 1801, 5134; in 1831, 3849. A. P., £4,042.

SOPLEY, a parish in the hundred of Christ-Church, New Forest, west division, co. of Southampton. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Winchester, rated at £12 16s. 10½d. Church ded. to St Michael. Patron, in 1829, Mr Willis. The Baptists have here a place of worship. Distance from Christ-Church, 3 m. N.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 840; in 1831, 1012. A. P., £1,027.

SOPWELL, in the parish of St Peter, co. of Hertford. Here are the remains of a Benedictine nunnery, subject to the abbey of St Alban's, in which, at the suppression, were nine nuns whose yearly revenues were estimated at, £68 8s.

SOPWORTH, a parish in the hundred of Chippenham, co. of Wilts. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Wilts and dio. of Salisbury, rated at £8 10s. 5d. Church ded. to St Mary. Patron, in 1829, the duke of Beaufort. Distance from Malmesbury, 7½ m. W.S.W. Pop., in 1801, 180; in 1831, 222. A. P., £1,960.

SOTBY, a parish in the east division of the wapentake of Wraggoss, parts of Lindsey, co. of Lincoln. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £9 0s. 10d. Church ded. to St Peter. Patron, the king.

SOTHERTON, a parish in the hundred of Blything, co. of Suffolk. Living, a discharged rectory with that of Uggheshall, in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich, rated at £5 6s. 8d. Church ded. to St Andrew. Patronage with the rectory of Uggheshall. Distance from Halesworth, 4 m. E.N.E. Pop., in 1801, 168; in 1831, 196. A. P., £966.

SOTTERLEY, a parish in the hundred of Wangford, co. of Suffolk. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich, rated at £10. Church ded. to St Margaret. Patron, in 1829, M. Barne, Esq. Distance from Beccles, 5 m. S.S.E. Pop., in 1801, 254; in 1831, 243. A. P., £1,358.

SOTWELL, a parish in the hundred of Moreton, co. of Berks. Living, a curacy to the rectory of St Leonard, Wallingford, in the archd. of Berks and dio. of Salisbury. Church ded. to St James. Patron, the rector of St Leonard, Wallingford. Distance from Wallingford, 2 m. W.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 68; in 1831, 157. A. P., £1,398.

SOUGHTON, a township in the parish of Llansallin, co. of Salop, 4 m. S.W. from Oswestry. Pop., in 1801, 156; in 1831, 247. A. P., £1,037.

SOULBURY, a parish in the hundred of Cottesloe, co. of Buckingham. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Buckingham and dio. of Lincoln, returned at £108. Church ded. to All Saints. Patron, in 1829, Sir John Lovett. Here is a place of worship for the Wesleyan Methodists, and a free school, liberally endowed, for twenty boys and girls. One of the former is apprenticed every year. Distance from Buckingham, 3 m. W.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 526; in 1831, 578. A. P., £4,390.

SOULBY, a township in the parish of Dacre, co. of Cumberland. It is situated on the margin of the beautiful Ulla-water, 5 m. S.W. from Penrith. Pop. with the parish.

SOULBY, a chapelry in the parish of Kirkby-Stephen, co. of Westmoreland. Living, a curacy to the vicarage of Kirkby-Stephen, in the archd. and dio. of Carlisle, returned at £90. Patron, in 1829, Sir C. J. Musgrave, Bart. Soullby is a handsome village situated on the Eden, which is here crossed by a good bridge of three arches. It has fairs the Tuesday before Easter, and August 30th. There is also a small endowment for educating three boys. Distance from Kirkby-Stephen, 2½ m. N.W. Pop., in 1801, 237; in 1831, 256. A. P., £1,354.

SOULDERN, a parish in the hundred of Ploughley, co. of Oxford. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Oxford, rated at £8 14s. 2d. Church ded. to St Mary. Patrons, the master and fellows of St John's college, Cambridge. The Cherwell bounds this parish on the west, and it is intersected by the Oxford and Birmingham canal. Here is a school on the national plan, supported partly by endowment and partly by subscription. Distance from Deddington, 4 m. E.S.E. Pop., in 1801, 394; in 1831, 599. A. P., £2,877.

SOULDROP, a parish in the hundred of Willey, co. of Bedford. Living, a discharged rectory with that of Knotting, in the archd. of Bedford and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £10. Church ded. to All Saints. Patronage with Knotting rectory. Distance from Higham-Ferrers, 5 m. S.S.E. Pop., in 1801, 188; in 1831, 242. A. P., £843.

SOULTON, a township in the parish of Wem, co. of Salop. Pop., in 1831, 31. A. P. with the parish.

SOUND, a township in the parish of Wybunbury, co.-palatine of Chester, 3 m. S.S.W. from Nantwich. Pop., in 1801, 192; in 1831, 255. A. P., £1,032.

SOURTON, a parish in the hundred of Lifton, co. of Devon. Living, a curacy to the rectory of Bristow, in the archd. of Totness and dio. of Exeter. Church ded. to St Thomas à Becket. Patron, the rector of Bristow. Distance from Oakhampton, 4½ m. S.W. Pop., in 1801, 450; in 1831, 625. A. P., £2,119.

SOUTH-ACRE, a parish in the hundred of South Greenhoe, co. of Norfolk. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich, rated at £10 18s. 1d. Church ded. to St George. Patron, in 1829, B. Fountain, Esq. South-Acre is separated from Castle-Acre by the small river Nar. Distance from Swaffham, 3½ m. N.W. Pop., in 1801, 78; in 1831, 96. A. P., £3,366.

SOUTHAM, a hamlet in the parish of Bishop's-Cleeve, co. of Gloucester, 2 m. N.E. from Cheltenham. Pop. with the parish.

SOUTHAM, a market-town and parish in the Southam division of the hundred of Knightlow, co. of Warwick. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Coventry and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, rated at £22 17s. 6d. The church—a beautiful building, having a fine tower surmounted by a lofty spire—is ded. to St James.

Patron, the king. Southam is a place of great antiquity, and had formerly a mint. It is pleasantly situated on an eminence rising from the east bank of the Stowe, over which is a neat stone bridge of two arches. The houses are modern and handsomely built. The market, which is well-supplied, especially with corn, is held on Monday; and there are fairs on Easter-Monday, the Monday after Holy Thursday, the 10th of July, the first Monday in Oct., and the first Monday in Lent. Southam is one of the polling places in the election of members for the southern division of the county. A head-borough and a constable are appointed annually at the court-leet of the lord of the manor. The monks of Coventry had here an establishment, and at the July fair the procession of the Lady Godiva is celebrated, in imitation of that of Coventry. A cell of Black canons, subordinate to the abbey of Rowcester, subsisted for some time at Haliwell in this parish. It was carried back to the parent institution in the 19th of Edward II. The Baptists have here a place of worship, and there is a free school endowed with upwards of £60 per ann. There is besides an endowment of £200 per annum for relieving the poor, and repairing the bridge; a dispensary and an infirmary are supported by subscription. Here are two mineral springs, one of them named Holywell, remarkable for intensely cold water. The Rev. Mr. Holyoake, at one time rector of this parish, compiled and published the first work in the form of a dictionary that was printed in the English language. Southam is distant from Warwick 10 m. E.S.E.; from London, 84 m. N.W. Pop., in 1801, 935; in 1831, 1256. A. P., £5,871.

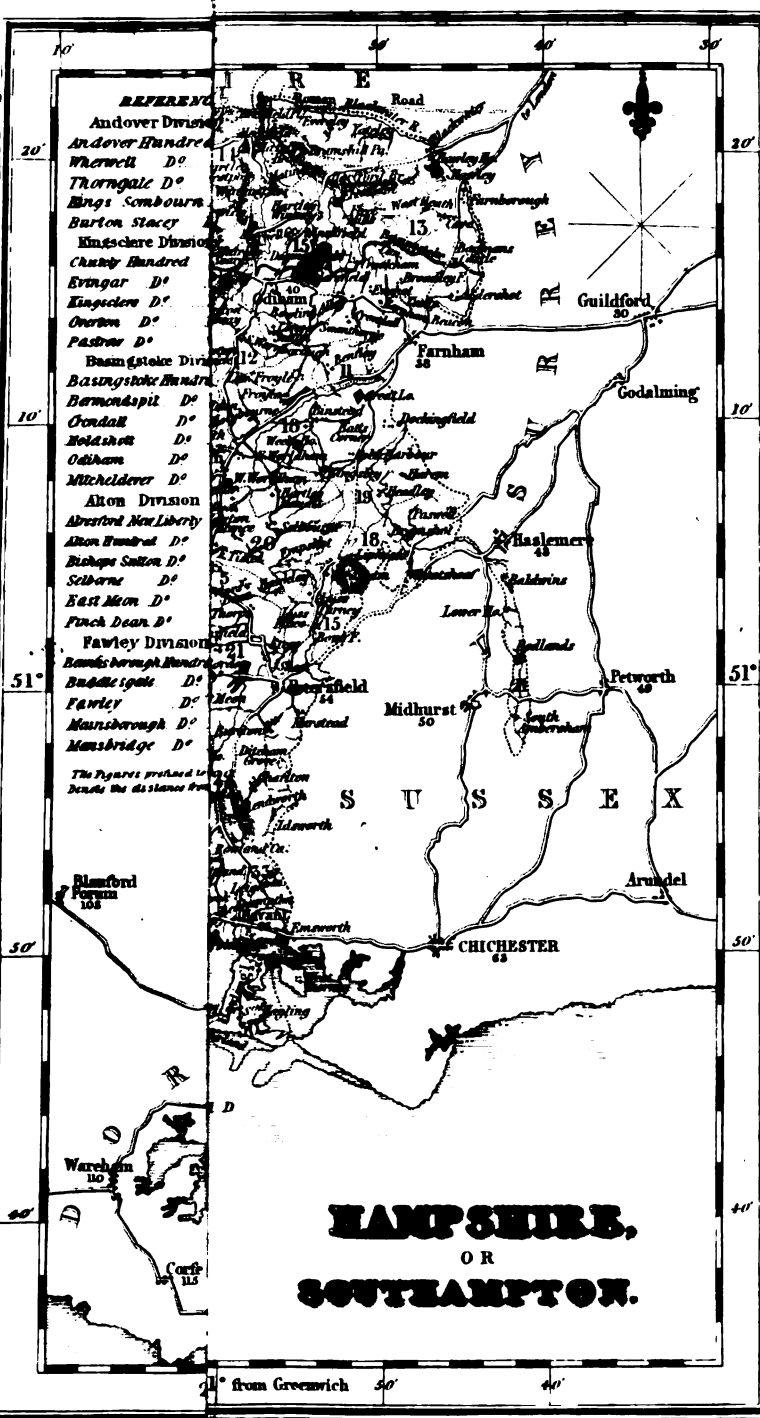

SOUTHAMPTONSHIRE,

A county, bounded on the N. by Berkshire; on the E. by Surrey and Sussex; on the W. by Dorset and Wiltshires; and on the S. by the English channel. It extends—including the isle of Wight—from 50° 38' to 51° 43' N. Lat. and from 45' to 1° 53' W. Lon.; comprising, according to various calculations, an area of at least 1628 square miles, or 1,410,920 acres. Of these acres, exclusive of extensive forests, not less than 100,000 lie waste. Exclusive of the isle of Wight, the form of this county approaches to a square, having a triangular projection at its south-west corner; and in the report prepared for the consideration of the Hon. the Board of Agriculture, it is divided for the purposes of accurate description, into five districts. The first, denominated the woodland district, occupies the space north of a line passing from Farnham in Surrey to the south of Odiham, north of Basingstoke, and south of Kingsclere and Highclere, till it enters Berkshire near East Woodhay. This division includes the woodlands and wastes of Bagshot, with the commons of Cove, Aldershot, Farnborough, &c., and comprises an area of 103,944 acres. The predominating soil is a strong brown and grey loam, resting upon a tough blue or yellow clay, generally wet and in some places boggy.

HAMPSHIRE, OR SOUTHAMPTON.

from Greenwich 50' 40'

In the eastern part are tracts of a dark coloured sandy or gravelly mould of a good depth, and resting upon a dry sub-soil; but even these are intermingled with a strong wet and brown loam. Along the borders of the rivulets lie tracts of meadow and pasture land, the soil of which is a sandy loam resting on clay, loam, peat, and gravel, and abounding in springs. Proceeding northward from the woodland valley, the soil becomes by degrees of a lighter quality, till the improvement is lost in a thin, sandy or gravelly mould, lying upon deep beds of white, red, and yellow sand and gravel, and a wet hungry loam upon a moist, loose, white and yellow clay. Along the south side of this district the soil is of a mixed character, something between the heavy loams we have just noticed, and the chalk, towards which on the south it is approaching. The wastes of this district and some of the enclosed grounds, afford peat, which is cut annually to a large extent, on the commons of Cove, Farnham, and Aldershot. The second district lies immediately to the south of that we have described, and like it extends, with the exception of a small district, across the county from east to west, being bounded by a line drawn from the north of Catherington on the eastern, and passing to the south of Bishop's-Waltham, to the vicinity of Sherfield-English on the western border. Of this large and central division, computed to contain 454,295 acres, the higher portion has the appearance of an elevated plain, broken into unequal portions and intersected by hollows, through which numerous brooks and rivulets rising in these upland tracts, find their way, for the most part in a southerly direction, to the sea. In these hollows are found extensive tracts of meadow and pasture land, and almost all the habitations of the people, the higher tracts being open and extensive sheep downs. The predominating soil on these downs is a thin grey loam, resting on a firm bed of chalk. Particular places have what is provincially termed a hazel mould, being light, dry, and friable, resting upon chalk rubble mixed with flint. This yields a short thick grass affording excellent pasturage for sheep. A third soil met with in these downs is a black vegetable mould, resting on a substratum scarcely different from the preceding. A fourth soil is a strong and flinty loam, resting from one to eight and ten feet deep, on the firm chalk—this is found chiefly on the flat summit of the lesser eminences, the acclivities of which give a fifth description of soil, consisting chiefly of decomposed chalk. This yields large crops of turnips and sainfoin. In lower situations the soil is a strong grey or red loam, difficult to labour, but uncommonly productive, especially in wheat. In numerous hollows, exclusive of the valleys that are traversed by running streams, the soil is termed shrave, formed of small flat flints, sometimes red pebbly gravel, combined with a small proportion of exceedingly tough loam, in a few places with dry sand or small gravel. Of the deeper valleys the soil is a black vegetable mould, resting on calcareous loam; large chasms occur which are occupied by masses of peat which is dug for fuel, and in which are found numerous trunks of large trees. The third district—including the forests of Woolmer and Alice-Holt, the hills of Bingfield, Great and Little Worldham, Empshot, and Selborne, with the lower sides of the chalk hills which surround and form the vale of Petersfield—extends to about 49,525 acres. The soil, for the most part, is what goes here by the name of malm, a grey sandy loam of good staple lying on a bottom of soft sandy rock. The vale of Petersfield is a tough, brown, flinty clay, with tracts interspersed of light sandy loam resting upon chalk. Ascending from this valley in a north or north-easterly direction, is an extensive tract of sand and gravel, lying along the border of Sussex, within and upon the confines of Woolmer forest, which has been planted with Scotch fir. A little further on in the same direction the sand is mixed with loam, and is convertible into fine turnip land. The valleys here have a thin mossy soil, resting upon clay of different colours. Peat is found upon the wastes, and in the forests of Woolmer and Alice-Holt. The fourth district occupies the remaining part of the county situated on the mainland, a portion on the south-east excepted, and comprises an area of 433,439 acres. Besides extensive wastes and commons, this district includes the forest of Bere, the New Forest and Waltham-chase. It has variety of soils, but light, sandy, and gravelly loams predominate. The heaths and commons comprise the higher lands between Gosport and Titchfield, between Titchfield, Bursledon, and Botley, and between the two latter and the river Itchen. The extensive commons of Sherley and Southampton also make large inroads on the cultivated district lying to the north of Southampton, Millbrook, and Redbridge. Descending from the heaths towards the south, the appearance of the county is smooth and unbroken, except by Hill-common and Tachbury-mount, beyond which lies a wide extent of flat low ground including Netley marsh, extending thence towards Eling, and westward into the New Forest. The west border of the New Forest is broken into hills, and on the west of the Avon the country rises abruptly and spreads into extensive heaths and commons, large portions of which have been planted with forest trees. Peat abounds on the heaths and in many of the wastes and low grounds. The islands of Hayling, Thorney, and Portsea, with the tracts on the mainland opposite them—comprising about 26,895 acres—form the fifth and last agricultural division. In the islands and the low grounds of the mainland the soil is in some places a strong flinty, and in others a light hazel coloured loam. On Portsea island the soil is similar to the chalk district which we have already described. Portsea island is to a great extent occupied as gardens, and is very productive. Marshes lie along the east coast which are frequently overflowed by the tides, and are chiefly appropriated as salterns. Along the south side the soil is sandy, and on the south-east coast is an inexhaustible bed of shingles, affording excellent materials for making and repairing the highways. The principal elevations in the county, on the mainland, are Farley hill, Portsdown hill, on which a large fair is held annually, July 30th, Weyhill, on which also there is an annual fair held October 11th, Danebury hill, Sitten hill, and Eaglehurst cliff. From all of these places the views are delightful, and from some of them peculiarly picturesque.

Rivers.—The rivers on the mainland are the Test, the Anton, the Itchen, the Avon, the Boldre, and the Exe. The Test has its sources near Whitechurch in the northern part of the county, is joined by the Anton which flows into it from the N.W. near Wherwell, whence flowing southwards by Stockbridge, Romsey, and Redbridge, it expands into Southampton-water, an arm of the sea extending in a south-easterly direction from that town to the sound at Calshot-castle. The Itchen rises about the middle of the county near Alresford, and being increased by the waters of a small stream called the Alne, flows westward to King's-Worthy, whence it pursues a southerly course by Winchester, Twyford, and Bishop's-Stoke, falling into Southampton-water about half a mile to the east of that town. This river expands considerably at its mouth, and it was brought into a regular channel and rendered navigable as far up as Winchester, by Godfrey de Lacy, bishop of that see, in the year 1215. The Avon enters the county from Wiltshire a little above Fording-bridge, and, augmented by numerous small streams, flows, frequently in separate channels, south, along the borders of the New Forest by Ringwood and Christ-church, where it receives the waters of the Stour from Dorsetshire and immediately after falls into Christ-church Bay. It was in the reign of Charles II. made navigable to Salisbury, in Wiltshire; but the works have been destroyed by floods and the navigation rendered impracticable. The Boldre, rising in the New Forest, flows to the south and falls into the sea below Lymington; it is an insignificant stream. The Exe, called also the Beaulieu river, rising also in the New Forest, flows south-east, and by a considerable estuary enters the sea below Exbury. A canal from Andover to the head of the Southampton-water, has been made along the valleys of the Test and Anton; passing by Stockbridge and Romsey, it terminates at Redbridge, in the parish of Millbrook. From Redbridge a branch proceeds direct to Southampton, while another extends westerly up the valley between East Dean and Lookerley, and East Tytherley to Aderbury-common near Salisbury. Both these branches have become unnavigable. This is the oldest canal in the kingdom, the act for its construction having been obtained in the reign of Charles I. It does not appear at any period to have realized the expectations of its projectors, probably from these expectations having been unreasonably sanguine. From Basingstoke a canal is carried directly eastward into Surry, where, by the Wey, it communicates with the Thames. This canal is upwards of 37 miles in length, and was executed at an expense of £100,000. In the neighbourhood of Odiham it is carried through a hill by an arched tunnel, three-quarters of a mile in length.

Climate.—In the northern, or what is called the woodland district of the county, the climate, though mild, is considerably chilled by damp exhalations. The most prevalent winds are from the south-west; fogs are frequent, and often of several days' continuance. In the elevated and extensive chalk district the air is dry, thin, and healthy. Westerly winds are the most prevalent, and they sometimes blow with great violence. In the lower tracts approaching the coast, the climate is exceedingly mild, though the coast winds are at times violent. Along the borders of the Southampton-water—which are finely wooded and extremely beautiful, owing to the large tracts of midland that are overflowed by every tide—agues are common, as they are from the same cause on the shores of Hayling and Portsea.

Produce, &c.—Almost every kind of crop is successfully cultivated in one place of this county or another. Wheat, if early, is universally eaten off by sheep in the month of March; the produce varies greatly, but is in some places most abundant. Barley after turnips generally averages 35 bushels an acre. Oats, cultivated principally for feeding horses, averages about 30 bushels. The straw of both oats and barley is here considered a valuable addition to the stock of winter food for cattle. Rye is in most parts of the county sown for green food for cattle, where it is allowed to stand as part of the harvest crop, as is commonly the case in the vale of Avon; it yields about 18 bushels per acre. Pease of various kinds are in general cultivation, but they are considered an uncertain crop. Beans are also considered precarious, though they are often to be met with. Turnips and tares are universally cultivated; colseed, only for feeding sheep. Cabbages are cultivated on an extensive scale, not for the purpose of feeding cattle as in some other counties, but for supplying the large towns and the numerous ships which frequent the southern coast. Potatoes are extensively cultivated for the same purpose. The cultivated grasses are broad clover, rye grass, trefoil, sanfoin, and lucern. Of the herbage on the downs, burnet forms a large proportion; a larger and stronger variety is found in the low grounds and upon the cold clay loams, where, as upon the downs, it appears to be indigenous. Along that part of the county which borders on Surrey, hops form a principal article of culture. They participate in the character of the Farnham hops: that town lying only a few miles to the eastward. The manures chiefly employed are marl, which is found of different kinds and qualities in various districts, chalky clay, chalk, turf, peat, and coal ashes; rack or sea weed is used where it can be procured along the coasts. This county is particularly celebrated for its irrigated meadows which are of great extent, and yield generally from 80 to 86 hundred weight of hay per acre; they are for the most part situated along the courses of the different rivers to which we have already adverted. On the heaths of Farnborough, Cove, and Aldershot, where the soil is remarkably retentive of moisture, a very peculiar species of industry is practised. Large dams have been constructed across the valleys and hollows which are generally stocked with carp and tench. These dams or ponds yield a very large profit to their owners, the fish being sent regularly to the London market. Gardening is carried on upon a large scale in the neighbourhood of all the large towns, and the best broccoli in the kingdom is said to be grown in the gardens of Portsea island. In the northern and middle districts, orchards are few in number and of small extent. In the south and south-western districts they abound; and cider is made in considerable quantities. The county has long been celebrated for its honey, being abundant in quantity and excellent in quality. It is called from the districts in which it is produced, heath or down honey, of which the latter is in the highest repute. Woods are numerous and often extensive in all parts of the county. The coppices are cut at different ages, the produce being used for hop poles, rafter poles, making wattled hurdles, hoops, and bavons, and faggots. Large exports for hoops are made from the southern districts to the West Indies. These coppices in the northern district consist chiefly of birch, willow, alder, hazel, wild cherry, ash, and sometimes oak; in the chalk district, of hazel, willow, ash, oak, maple, white thorn, beech, and wild cherry; in the southern parts of the county, of hazel, willow, alder, birch, holly, ash, beech, and wild cherry. In the chalk district, beech flourishes with peculiar vigour, and in all the woodlands there seems to be a pretty large proportion of this timber. Ash is found only in some places. Elm is scarce, but is occasionally met with, especially in the southern districts. When found large, they are in high demand at the royal dock yard, where they are used as keel pieces. The albe or aspen poplar, the lime or linden tree, and the Turin or Lombardy poplar are common, and firs of almost all varieties flourish in mixed plantations.

Forests.—There are not less than 100,000 acres of waste land in the county, exclusive of the forests, large portions of which can be classed under no other denomination. Of these forests, the most extensive is the New Forest, which owes its origin to William the Conqueror, who, says an old writer, "took away much land from God and men, and converted it to the use of wild beasts and the sport of his dogs, by which he demolished 36 mother churches, and drove away the poor inhabitants." Originally this forest seems to have embraced nearly, if not altogether, the whole south-west corner of the county, from the Southampton water to the sea on the south, and the Avon on the west. From the latest perambulation, in the 22d of Charles II., its extent seems still to be from Godshill, on the north-west, south-eastward to the sea, a distance of 23 miles; and from Hardley on the east, to Ringwood on the west, a distance of 15, comprising not less than 92,365 statute acres. There were, however, within the perambulation, manors, freeholds, copyholds, lease-holds, and purprestures, or encroachments on the forest and lands enclosed and held by the master-keepers and groom-keepers, with their respective lodges, amounting to 28,520 acres, reducing the woods and waste lands to 63,845 acres, which then did, and still do, belong to the crown, subject to certain rights of commonage, pasturage, pannage, and fuel, possessed by the proprietors of estates within or adjacent to the forest. The crown, also, has certain rights and interests in all the properties that lie within the limits of the forest,—in the freehold rights relative to the deer and game,—in the copyholds to quit rents and fines, and to all the timber trees that grow upon them,—in the purprestures, or encroachments, to grant leases and to receive valuable considerations in return. All these rights have been defined by an act of the 9th and 10th of William III., for the preservation and increase of timber in the forest. By this act the crown was empowered to inclose 6000 acres as a nursery for timber, till the trees should be superior to the chances of being injured by deer or cattle, when these 6000 acres should be thrown open, and another 6000 inclosed, to be thrown open in the same manner as the former, followed by another inclosure, &c. &c. The crown, by this act, is also empowered to keep deer in the uninclosed part of the forest, at all times, and without any limitation.

For local purposes, the New Forest is divided into nine bailiwicks, which are again divided into 15 walks. It is under the government of a lord-warden, appointed by letters patent under the great seal during his majesty's pleasure. The lord-warden enjoys, by patent, a grant of the manor of Lyndhurst and the hundred of Redbridge, with various other privileges and emoluments. A riding forester is appointed in the same manner as the lord-warden, whose office is to ride before the king when he enters the forest. A bow-bearer and two rangers are appointed, during pleasure, by the lord-warden, and a woodward, during pleasure, by letters patent from the king. This officer acts by deputy. Four verderers, judges of the swanimote and attachment courts, are chosen by the freeholders of the county in pursuance of the king's writ. A high and an under steward are appointed, during pleasure, by the lord-warden. The duty of the latter is to attend at, and enrol the proceedings of the courts of attachment and swanimote, and to hold the court leet for the hundred of Redbridge, and the courts baron for the manor of Lyndhurst. Twelve regarders are chosen by the freeholders of the county. There are, besides, nine foresters, or master-keepers, and an indefinite number of under-foresters, or groom-keepers. There is also a naval purveyor for the forest, whose duty is to assign timber for the navy, and to prevent any fit for that important use from being cut and applied to other purposes. The forest courts are regularly held at Lyndhurst by the verderers, who preside in them. The New Forest affords many magnificent views of spreading woods, extended lawns, and vast sweeps of wild heath, interspersed with rivulets, and terminating with occasional glimpses of the far distant ocean. Owing, it is supposed, to the nature of the soil, the oaks are mostly gnarled, and their branches are twisted into the most singular and picturesque forms. In point of convenience, having easy communication by water with the royal and private dock-yards, the New Forest is superior to every other in the kingdom.—The forest of Bere lies to the north of the Port-down hills, and comprises 16,000 acres, of which about a third part is inclosed. It is divided into the East and West walks, to each of which are annexed several smaller divisions, called purties, all of them subject to the forest laws. Its officers are a warden, four verderers, two master-keepers, two under keepers, a ranger, a steward of the swanmote court, 12 regarders, and two agistors.—To the N.W. of Bere forest lies the chase of Bishop's-Waltham. It comprises about 2000 acres, and belongs to the see of Winchester.—On the eastern border of the county, approaching the confines of Surrey and Sussex, is the forest of Alice-Holt and Woolmer. It is divided into two parts, by intervening private property, and comprises 15,483 acres, of which 8694 belong to the crown.

Minerals.—The mineral productions of the county are not numerous. They consist of ironstone, found near the mouth of the Beaulieu river, washed up by the sea, and in the cliffs near Hordwell. The range of chalk hills crossing the county from east to west, and occupying the centre of it, forms a portion of that vast formation which constitutes so remarkable a feature in the geology of England. The chalk raised in the county is of two kinds—white and grey. Both are burned into lime of good quality. The latter forms an excellent cement under water, for which it is extensively employed. A hard red stone is found between Milton and Christchurch, which has been employed in the erection of various ancient structures in that part of the county. Potter's clay, in great variety, is found in various parts of the county.

The Isle of Wight.—The Isle of Wight, which forms a part of the county, is separated from the mainland by a strait, formerly called the Solent Sea, now the Sound, or more commonly the West Channel. This strait is at its west end about a mile across, at the east end nearly seven miles. The form of this fine island is rhomboidal, its greatest length from east to west being 23, and its breadth from north to south about 18 miles. The principal river is the Medina, which, rising at the bottom of St Catherine's down, in the south corner of the island, flows directly northward, dividing it into two nearly equal parts, and falls into the sea at Cowes harbour. The inferior streams are the Yar, the Wooten, and the Ear; and the shores are indented by numerous creeks and bays which add greatly to the beauty of the island and to the convenience of the inhabitants. The surface of the island is finely diversified. A range of high hills runs through its centre from east to west, which command most delightful views over every part of the island, with the wide ocean on the south, and the beautiful shore of Hampshire on the north.—They afford also fine pasturage for sheep. On the coast, particularly the south coast, the land is in some places very high, terminating in steep cliffs; on the north the ground slopes to the water in easy declivities. Towards the western extremity the rocks are bare, broken, and precipitous, rising in some places 600 feet above the level of the sea, and terminating in what are called the Needles, sharp pointed rocks that have been disjoined from these cliffs by the action of the waves, and rising to the height of 120 feet above low water mark. One of them, some years ago, being undermined by the sea, fell, and totally disappeared. The highest point of land in the island is St Catherine's hill, 750 feet above the level of the sea. The soil and substrata of the island are very much varied. Of the inclosed and depastured marshes and low grounds bordering on the Yar, the Medina, &c. &c., the soil is a tender hazel coloured loam, lying upon a blue or black clay, from which it is separated, in some places, by a bed of coarse sand approaching to gravel. The surface mould of the low grounds and meadows, bordering the higher parts of the courses of these streams, is various, according to the quantity and quality of the adventitious matter washed down by the rains from the surrounding hills. In the northern part of the island, and along its southern shore, the prevailing soil is a rough strong clay, mixed in some places with a bluish argillaceous, and in others, with a pure white shell marl. Of the remaining parts, the predominating soil is red sand mixed with argillaceous and calcareous marl, chalk, and its usual accompaniments, red loam mixed with flints. These soils are fruitful in the highest degree; but there are some heaths intermixed, and a few commons, of which fertility is by no means the distinctive character. Small tracts of moor are to be met with, especially on the western branch of the Medina, on the Yar, on the inlets of Shalfleet and Newton, and in Braden haven. Of these, large portions have been embanked, and especially those of the parishes of Brading and Yaverland, form the richest feeding lands in the island. An attempt was made by Sir Bevis Thelwall, and Sir Hugh Middleton the constructor of the New River, to recover the whole of Brading marshes, by throwing an embankment across the narrow inlet by which they communicate with the sea. This they were fortunate enough to complete, but in a very wet season, when the inner haven was full of water, an unusually high spring-tide made a breach in the embankment, which has never been repaired, though, at low water, the gap or breach is not more than 20 yards in width. The marshes, of course, remain still in their ancient state. The chalk downs of Brading and Arreton form on the east coast an unbroken range, from Culver cliff to the valley by which they are separated from Staple's-heath. A highly cultivated valley, extending northward from Shorwell to Newport, separates those of Shorwell and Gatcombe from a range extending to the western extremity of the island, broken only by three gaps, one of which forms the passage from the head of Yarmouth river to the inner cove of Freshwater bay. Towards the southern extremity of the island, a tract of downs terminates abruptly towards the sea, in a precipice of limestone rock, which, seen at a distance, seems to be an immense stone wall overhanging the beautifully romantic tract called the under cliff, which stretches out towards the shore a distance of several miles.

The same variety of climate is experienced in the isle of Wight as in the other parts of the county; but, upon the whole, experience has demonstrated the fact of its being highly favourable to the human constitution. Its bland and salubrious character is especially apparent in the southern part of the island, which is annually the resort of numerous valetudinaries, many of whom find their complaints, especially those of a pulmonary kind, greatly relieved by a few weeks' residence. Strong, and even violent westerly gales prevail on the southern coast, from which the northern is wholly exempted, yet the crops on the former are always from 10 to 14 days earlier than on the latter. The agricultural produce does not appear to be different from what we have already noticed as belonging to the county. Orchards are here universal, and almost every farmer makes annually some hogheads of excellent cider, chiefly for the use of his own family. Much fine timber is grown in the island. The woods of Swainston, in the West Medina, are of considerable extent; and those of Wooton and Quarr, in the Eastern, occupy an area of 1000 acres. Parkhurst, or Carisbrook Forest, to the north-west of Newport, called also the King's Forest, includes about 3000 acres, but it is now nearly destitute of trees. At the western extremity of the island, the cliffs are frequented by an immense number of sea-birds, such as puffins, razor-bills, wilcocks, gulls, cormorants, and Cornish choughs; as also by daws, starlings, and wild pigeons. Of these, some remain only for a part of the season, others remain all the year round. Vipers abound in the island, and vast numbers of them are caught every year for medicinal purposes.

Of the isle of Wight, the numerous strata, of various kinds and formations, exhibiting great diversity of position, form an important field of study to the geologist. At the northern foot of the downs, in the Western Medina, grist, or quarry stone, of a yellowish grey colour, and very porous, is dug up in detached masses, and often used for building; and in the southern side of the island, a strong liver-coloured building stone, rising in cubical masses, incrustated with a brown ochre, and inclosing specimens of very rich ironstone, frequently occurs. A rough calcareous free stone is frequently found in detached pieces at the bottom of marl pits; and to the north of Arreton-downs, a close grey limestone is raised, the beds of which are separated from each other by thin layers of marine shells, cemented together by alum. Near Sandown-fort, a plum-pudding stone is found in large quantities, and is in great request for paving and flooring. Ochres of divers colours and qualities are found in various places, and at the north-west extremity of the island is a vein of fine white, which is in high demand for the glass-houses of all the three kingdoms.

Animals.—Southamptonshire has no particular breed of cattle. Those of all the neighbouring counties are indiscriminately met with in all situations. Many cows are kept for the sole purpose of suckling calves, which, when fed, are sent to the markets of London, Portsmouth, Chichester, Winchester, &c. &c. Sheep are kept in immense droves. The old Hampshire, or Wiltshire breed, were formerly preferred in the woodland district. They are now often crossed, especially with the new Leicester. A great extent of the county, especially on the open chalk downs, both on the mainland and in the isle of Wight, is occupied by the South Down breed. In the isle of Wight the Dorsetshire breed is sometimes preferred. Hogs are kept in great numbers, and in the end of autumn fed upon the mast in the woodlands and forests, from which circumstance, or rather, perhaps, from a superior mode of curing, the bacon of the county is famed for its exquisite taste and flavour. The native hog is a coarse, raw-boned, flat-sided, ugly animal, but is now often superseded by the Berkshire hog, or by a cross between that and different other breeds. The horses have a coarse and heavy appearance. Light small horses, termed heath-croppers, are bred upon the heaths, and in the forests, where they propagate indiscriminately, and where they succeed in maintaining an existence the whole year round.

Manufactures.—The manufactures of the county are various, but not, if we except ship-building, extensive. In the numerous creeks and harbours of the county, but especially in the royal dock-yard at Portsmouth, ship-building is extensively carried on. Other productions of the county are chiefly woollen goods, bedtick, sacking, light silk articles, leather, and a coarse kind of earthenware. Silk mills are carried on at Overton; and in that neighbourhood the young female peasantry are extensively employed in plaiting straw for bonnets, which are manufactured in most of the towns in the county. The making of paper is extensively carried on in some places, and at Lymington is a manufactory of salt. To set forth the facilities this county possesses for commerce, it is only necessary to name its roadsteads and harbours. Hayling and Portsmouth harbours, with their numerous dependencies; Southampton-Water, with the mouths of the Itchen and Test; their ship-yards, with the havens of Redbridge, Eling, Hythe, Cadland, and Fawley. On the Hamble, Humble, Botley, and Bursledon. The Beaulieu, with its dependencies; the Boldre, with numerous creeks through the Salterns, including Keyhaven and Christchurch, with its branches, forming the mouth of the rivers Avon and Stour. In the isle of Wight are the harbours of Brading, Cowes, Hithes, and South Yarmouth. The roadsteads separating the isle of Wight from the main body of the county, are St Helena, Motherbank, Spithead, Cowes, Southampton bay, and Yarmouth roads. This last is terminated westward by the Needles, and by a broad bank of shingles thrown up by the sea, which beats here with extreme violence, is contracted to the space of a mile in breadth. Upon the projecting south-east point of this bank stands Hurst-castle, built to command the passage in the reign of Henry VIII. Salmon are taken in all the rivers and creeks which discharge their waters into the sea. The fishery on the Southampton water is particularly extensive, and the boats frequently make long coasting voyages in quest of fish, which are not to be found in the Southampton water. The produce, except such as will not pay the carriage, is all sent by light vans, kept for the purpose, to the London market. On the flat and rocky shores of the isle of Wight, a number of persons are employed taking shrimps and prawns,—crabs and lobsters are taken on its border shores.

History.—At the period of the Roman invasion, the southern part of this county seems to have been possessed by the Regni, the more northern by the Belgic Gauls, who had violently dispossessed the former inhabitants. By the Romans it was included in the division, Britannia Prima. The isle of Wight, by that people called Vectis, according to Suetonius, was conquered by Vespasian about the year 43. A few coins, however, are all the traces of Roman occupation that have ever been found in it. At a subsequent period this county was the scene of many bloody conflicts with the Saxons. On the first formation, by Cerdic, of the kingdom of Wessex, part of it was included in that kingdom, while its southern shores, with the isle of Wight, was included in the kingdom of Kent. Preparatory to the establishment of this kingdom, was the overthrow, in what now constitutes part of the New Forest, in 508, of Natanleod, a British king, who, with 5000 of his subjects, fell in the conflict. In 519, from which the Saxon chronicle dates the permanent reign of the West Saxon kings, Cerdic, and his son, Cynric, obtained another victory over the Britons at Cerdices-ford; and in 530 they subdued the isle of Wight, with the slaughter of a great part of the inhabitants. Cerdic died in 534, only four years after this event. The operations of this active and enterprising chieftain seem to have been confined to this county, but he laid so firmly the foundations of his power, that his kingdom, under his successors, finally swallowed up the other kingdoms into which the island was divided. Wulfere, king of Mercia, in 661, conquered the isle of Wight, and bestowed it upon the king of the South Saxons, but it was reannexed to the kingdom of Wessex, by Coadwalla, a descendent of Cerdic, only 15 years after. In 860, the northern sea-kings made a descent upon the coast, and ravaged the country as far as Winchester, at that time the capital of the united heptarchy. In returning to their ships, however, heavily laden with plunder, they were pursued, overtaken, and many of them cut off. Previously, these marauders had seized upon the isle of Wight, which they converted into a dépôt for the plunder they carried off from the neighbouring coast, and used as a place of retreat when they were occasionally repulsed. How long they maintained themselves in it is uncertain, but in the reign of Alfred they again landed upon the island and plundered the inhabitants. In the reign of Ethelred II., 1001, they took and kept possession of it for many years. At Winchester the cruel and impolitic massacre of that people was commenced, by Ethelred's orders, on the 13th of November, 1002. In the reign of Edward the Confessor, the isle of Wight was twice ravaged by Earl Godwin; and again by Earl Tosti, in the reign of Harold. Between 1066 and 1086, the south-western part of the county was laid waste, and 36 parochial churches destroyed by William I., for the purpose of forming a royal chase, now known by the name of the New Forest. In this forest, in 1081, Richard, the son of William I., was dashed by his horse against a tree and killed. In the same forest, Richard, the son of Duke Robert, and nephew to William Rufus, was killed; and, in the same year, the 2d of August, 1100, William Rufus himself was in like manner killed by an arrow, inadvertently shot by Walter Tyrrel, knight of Pontoise; all which accidents were, by the people of those times, construed as immediate visitations from heaven for the iniquity of the monarch, not so much in taking the means of life from so many people in forming his royal chase or hunting grounds, but in taking down 36 mother churches. On the death of William Rufus, Henry, his younger brother, hastened to Winchester, where he possessed himself of the royal treasure, and thence to London, where he was proclaimed king. In the succeeding year, Robert, duke of Normandy, his elder brother, landed with an army at Portsmouth, for the purpose of disputing the succession, but yielded at last to the mediation of the barons. The Empress Maud, and her brother, Robert, earl of Gloucester, in 1140, landed at the same place with only 140 attendants, designing to wrest the throne from the usurper Stephen, and in the internal commotions that ensued, the county was the scene of much bloodshed. To Odiham, in this county, John retired from Oxford, when he found himself overmatched by his refractory barons, whence he repaired to Runymede, and on the 19th of June, 1215, signed and sealed Magna Charta, which ever since has been regarded as the palladium of British liberty, and to the isle of Wight the treacherous monarch retired after the signature of that celebrated document, whence he despatched messengers to the pope, who absolved him from the obligation of the deed, and to the continent, to raise mercenaries whereby he might make a successful war upon the infant liberties of his people. In the sequel of this quarrel, the barons having invited to their aid a French army, under the command of Louis the Dauphin, in the year 1016, Odiham castle was defended for John, by only three officers and 15 men, against the Dauphin and his whole army for 15 days. In 1338, Southampton was plundered and burnt by a fleet of French, Spaniards, and Genoese. A son of the king of Sicily, and 300 of the invaders, fell in the action. Edward III., his son, the Black Prince, and the army with which they achieved the victory of Cressy, sailed from Southampton on the 10th of July, 1346. During the reigns of Edward III. and Richard II., the isle of Wight was invaded by the French on various occasions, partially plundered, and, on one occasion, the towns of Yarmouth and Newton had a heavy contribution levied on the inhabitants, and an oath exacted of them, that in case the invaders returned within the year, they should oppose to them no resistance. A conspiracy against the life of Henry V. was discovered at Southampton, while he was preparing to embark with the army, that afterwards gained the victory of Agincourt, and the leaders, the earl of Cambridge and Sir Thomas Grey, put to death in consequence. In the 15th of Henry VI., Henry, duke of Warwick was, by patent from Henry, who himself assisted at the coronation, constituted king of the isle of Wight, but that nobleman dying soon after, the lordship of the island was given by the same monarch to Humphrey, duke of Gloucester. In the 1st of Henry VII., the lordship was given to Sir Edward, who, to ingratiate himself with the king, persuaded the principal part of the inhabitants to undertake, with him, an expedition into France, in aid of the duke of Brittany, who was in arms against the French monarch; all of whom, together with their leader, with the exception of one boy, who brought home the melancholy tidings, fell in a battle fought near St Aubins. To encourage population, so much reduced by this disaster, a law was passed, prohibiting any one individual to hold lands, farms, or tithes, above the annual value of ten marks. At Winchester, Henry VIII. entertained Charles V. in 1573; and, in the same town, Philip, afterwards II. of Spain, was united in marriage with Mary, queen of England, July 25th, 1554. At Portsmouth, in this county, George Villiers, duke of Buckingham, was assassinated in 1628. At the same port was landed, on the 14th of May, 1662, the Infanta of Portugal, who was the next day given in marriage to Charles II. The Bellerophon, in 1815, approached this port, having on board Napoleon Buonaparte, who had given himself up to the British government, and expected to have been allowed a residence in England, but was ordered to St Helena. In the contest between Charles I. and his parliament, the isle of Wight was early secured for the parliament, and it enjoyed profound tranquillity, while almost every other part of the kingdom was a scene of destruction and bloodshed. At Alton, in this county, on the mainland, there was a severe engagement in the month of December, 1643, in which the royalist, Colonel Bowles, was killed, and his regiment taken prisoners by the parliamentary forces, under Sir William Waller. Basinghouse, which had been heroically defended by the marquess of Winchester, from the month of August, 1643, was, in October, 1645, stormed by Oliver Cromwell in person. After his escape from Hampton-court, in 1647, Charles concealed himself at Titchfield-house, in this county, till he there delivered himself up to Colonel Hammon, then governor of the isle of Wight, by whom he was conveyed to Carisbrook-castle. After a residence, partly as a guest, and partly as prisoner, of 13 months in Carisbrook-castle, he was brought in close custody, November 29th, 1648, to Hurst-castle, and thence to London, where he was shortly after tried, condemned, and executed.

Antiquities.—The antiquities of the county consist of Roman remains, such as coins, rings, bricks, and pottery, found principally in the neighbourhood of Silchester, camps found in various places, roads, &c. Religious, formerly existing in the county, have been stated to be 53. Of some of them there are still interesting remains, descriptions of which will be found under the heads of the places where they are situated. See BEAULIEU, HIDE, NETLEY, QUARR, WINCHESTER, &c. Modern residences of the nobility and gentry are very numerous all over the county, and the habitations of the peasantry have an extremely pleasing and comfortable appearance. Chalybeate springs are found in various places in the isle of Wight. At Pitland is one strongly impregnated with sulphur, and at Shanklin, another tinctured with alum. In the northern woodlands the waters are strongly chalybeate; in the bogs and swamps, charged with a solution of iron. In the strong loam, woodland, clay, and chalk districts, the want of water, particularly in dry seasons, is severely felt. Fuel in the woodland districts is in tolerable supply. Formerly the peasantry had a claim of snap wood, i. e. fallen branches, and such withered pieces as they could snap off by hand, or with a hook fastened to a long pole; but making too free in the use of it, it has been taken from them. Turf is paired on the commons, and peat is sometimes used. Vast quantities of furze are cut on the waste lands for fuel, and the parishes that lie contiguous to the forests have a right of turbary in them. Coal can be procured only at the ports or along the canals, and that at an extremely high price.

Divisions, &c.—The county of Southampton is included in the diocese of Winchester and province of Canterbury. It forms an archdeaconry with that of Winchester, comprising the deaneries of Alresford, Alton, Andover, Basingstoke, Droxford, Fordingbridge, Sombourn, Southampton, isle of Wight, and Winchester. It is divided into 305 parishes, of which 154 are rectories, 72 vicarages, the remainder being curacies. For civil purposes it is divided into 13 divisions, viz. Alton-North, Alton-South, Andover, Basingstoke, Fawley, Kingsclere, New Forest East, New Forest West, Portsmouth, Portsmouth, borough and town of Portsea, Southampton town and county, Winchester city, soke, and liberty, and the isle of Wight. These divisions are again sub-divided into 37 hundreds. It contains one city, Winchester, eleven boroughs, and twelve market-towns. It sends four knights for the shire to parliament, namely, two for the northern, and two for the southern division of the county. The former are elected at Winchester, the latter at Southampt. By the reform bill the boroughs of Newton and Yarmouth in the isle of Wight, and the borough of Stockbridge on the mainland, have been disfranchised, while the boroughs of Christ-church and Petersfield have been reduced to one member each. It is included in the western circuit. The assizes and quarter-sessions are held at Winchester. Pop., in 1801, 219,656; in 1831, 314,700. A. P., £1,130,952.

SOUTHAMPTON,

A seaport, borough, market-town, and county of itself, designated the town and county of the town of Southampton, locally situated in the county of Southampton. The livings are, All Saints, a discharged rectory, rated at £8 1s. 10d., returned at £145. Patron, the king.—Holyrood, a discharged vicarage, rated at £12 1s. 10d., returned at £115 9s. 3d. Patron, Queen's college, Oxford.—St Jesus, a curacy, not in charge, returned at £61 5s. Patrons, in 1829, Mr and Mrs Silvester.—St John, a discharged rectory with that of St Lawrence, rated at £6 13s. 4d., returned at £98 8s. 4d. Patron, the king.—St Lawrence, a discharged rectory, rated at £7 10s. Patron, the king.—St Mary, a rectory, rated at £37 5s. 5d. Patron, the bishop of Winchester.—St Michael, a discharged vicarage, rated at £12 11s. 10d., returned at £88 2s. Patron, the king. The livings are all in the archd. and dio. of Winchester, with the exception of St Mary's, which is a peculiar in the jurisdiction of the rector. The church of All Saints is a modern structure in the Grecian style of architecture, having at the east end a turret rising from a square pedestal, surrounded by six Corinthian columns supporting a Corinthian entablature surmounted by a dome. The interior is handsome and appropriate. The area beneath is divided into arched catacombs, in one of which lie the remains of Captain Carteret, the celebrated circumnavigator. The church of Holyrood is an ancient edifice, having a tower and spire, with a portico in front where the elections are held. Within, is a monument to Miss E. Stanley, with an epitaph written by the author of the seasons, who has also paid a tribute to her memory in that divine work. The church of St John's has been demolished. St Lawrence, to which it is united, is a small and very ancient structure. St Mary's is modern, with an extensive burying ground annexed. St Michael's is a large and ancient fabric in the Norman style of architecture. It has a tower and spire rising between the nave and chancel. Within, is an old Roman font and several antique monuments, and in the chapel attached to it is a cenotaph to Chancellor Wriothesley, who passed sentence of death upon Ann Boleyn.

Description.—Southampton is delightfully situated on a peninsular tract of ground rising from the north-eastern shore of the Southampton-water; bounded on the east by the Itchen, over which is a bridge leading to Gosport; and on the south and west by the fine estuary formed by the mouth of the Test. The shores of this estuary are richly clothed with wood, affording a rich succession of finely diversified scenery, the vicinity being enlivened by villages, villas, and princely mansions. The town, rising gradually from the margin of the bay, has a most beautiful and imposing aspect, and the approach from the London road through an avenue of fine old elms and a well-built suburb, is striking in no common degree. The principal entrance is through Bar-gate, on the north front of which are two gigantic figures representing Sir Bevois of Southampton, and the giant Ascupart, who, as the legend goes, was slain by Sir Bevois in single combat. From this ancient gate, a spacious street upwards of half a mile in length, and surpassing most of the streets in the metropolis, leads directly to the quay, for the improvement of which, what was called the Water-gate, has been taken down. A wall about a mile and a quarter in length, encompassed the old town; considerable portions of this wall are still entire, but its circular towers are mostly in ruins. Of the ancient gates, besides that we have already mentioned, the west and south gates are still entire. The old and the new towns are distinguished in regard to their situations; with regard to Bar-gate by the terms above and below, the new being above, and the old below Bar. The town contains a number of fine streets, particularly one recently built from the street Above Bar to the western shore, with a terrace which commands an exceedingly fine view of the surrounding scenery. The streets are well-paved, lighted with gas, and supplied with water collected from springs on an adjoining common, which is conveyed from a general reservoir into public conduits and into many private houses. The public buildings are, a guild-hall, sessions-hall, audit house, prisons, &c., of which it would be tedious to give a particular description. There is also here an old castle, supposed to be of Saxon origin. On the ruins of the old keep, a round tower has been erected, which affords a delightful view of the surrounding country. The theatre, in French-street, is tastefully decorated, and is occupied by a regular company at certain seasons. The botanic gardens, on the west bank of the Southampton-water, are richly stocked with curious and rare plants, both indigenous and exotic, and they form a most agreeable promenade. There are in the town several extensive libraries and well-furnished reading rooms, and there is a philosophical society established by a proprietary of 30 members, and supported by an unlimited number of annual subscribers of £1 1s. per annum. Lectures are delivered in this society at regular intervals, and the lecture room, during six months of the year, in which it is unoccupied by the society, serves as an exhibition room for the sale of paintings, which, from the great resort of company to the town, is very considerable. From the salubrity of the air and the extremely beautiful scenery which every where surrounds it, Southampton is a favourite resort for sea-bathing from all the surrounding county, and nothing has been neglected that can in any degree contribute to the comfort or convenience of the visitors. Buildings have been erected at an expense of upwards of £7,000, in which hot, cold, medicated, and vapour baths have been constructed upon the most approved principles. An elegant and spacious promenade room is attached, commanding a full view of the water, which is in the summer season covered with fine yachts and pleasure boats of every description. Along the beach is a broad causey, extending half a mile in length and bordered with fine trees; and on the platform, which has been much enlarged, is an ancient piece of ordnance presented to the town by Henry VIII., and recently mounted, at the expense of John Fleming, Esq., one of the members for the county, upon a handsome cast-iron carriage. From the port—the jurisdiction of which extends from Langstone harbour on the east, to Hurst-castle on the west, and midway from the castle of Calshot to the isle of Wight—an extensive trade is carried on with Russia, Portugal, Sweden, and different parts of the Baltic. The imports are wines, fruits, iron, hemp, pitch, tar, and timber. There is also a considerable trade with the islands of Guernsey and Jersey. All the wool shipped for these islands from any other port, must be re-landed here or pay duty at the custom-house, according to an act passed in the reign of Edward III. A pretty constant intercourse is carried on with Wales, whence iron and slabs are imported, and with Newcastle, whence are imported coals, lead, and glass. The quay—upon which stands the custom-house—is very convenient, and the harbour, which is spacious, affords good anchorage where vessels may in all winds ride with perfect security. During the summer and autumn, steam vessels proceed regularly to Havre, Guernsey, Jersey, the isle of Wight, Portsmouth, &c., and there are sailing packets on the same destination, at other seasons daily. The market-days are Tuesday, Thursday, Friday, and Saturday; and the market is abundantly supplied with provisions of every kind. The fairs are held, May 6th and 7th, and on Trinity Monday and Tuesday. This last is proclaimed by the mayor with special ceremonies on the preceding Saturday. During its continuance the senior bailiff presides and entertains the corporation, in a booth erected for the purpose. A court of pie-powder is attached, and during the fair all persons are free from arrest for debt within the precincts of the borough. The fair, which is chiefly for cattle, horses, and pigs, is held on the east side of the town, near the site of an ancient hermitage formerly occupied by William Geoffrey, to whom its revenue was originally granted.

History.—The town was first incorporated in the reign of Henry I., whose charter was confirmed by Richard I., and by John, who assigned the customs of the port, together with those of Portsmouth, to the burgesses, for an annual payment of £200. These privileges were confirmed and extended by Henry, who erected the town with the surrounding district into a county of itself. The government, according to a charter from Charles I., is vested in a mayor, a sheriff, two bailiffs, an indefinite number of aldermen, 24 common-councilmen, assisted by a recorder, town-clerk, two coroners, four sergeants at mace, &c. The mayor, who is admiral of the port, the late mayor, the recorder, five senior aldermen, and two senior common-councilmen, together with the bishop of Winchester, are justices of the peace within the borough and liberties. The freedom can be obtained only by election of the corporation, which has the power of increasing the list of burgesses to an indefinite extent. The corporation hold quarterly courts of session for all offences not capital, and they have the privilege of holding assizes, when the judges are travelling the western circuit, to try capital offences committed within the limits of the town and county of the town. The inhabitants paying scot and lot have a right of commonage on the town lands, the most extensive of which is Southampton-common, which contains about 350 acres. Upon this common horse races are run annually in the month of August. The town sends two members to parliament.

Charitable Institutions, &c.—Besides the established churches and the chapels connected with them, there are here places of worship for the Society of Friends, the Baptists, the Independents, the Wesleyan Methodists, and the Roman Catholics. Here is a free grammar school, founded by Edward VI. The endowment does not exceed £30 per annum. Perhaps the most eminent individual educated at this establishment was Dr Isaac Watts, whose father kept a boarding-school in the town of Southampton. Alderman Taunton of this town, who left considerable funds for charitable uses, founded and endowed here in 1760, a charity school for qualifying 20 boys for the sea service. The original number of scholars has been, by a decree of the court of chancery, reduced to ten, who are permitted to choose any mechanical trade, if they prefer a trade to the sea-service, and an apprentice fee of £5, and a present of £5 5s., on the expiry of the indenture, on producing a certificate of good conduct. From the same funds, aided by a bequest of the late Charles D'Ausey, Esq., £10 per annum is paid to 16 decayed persons of the town, and £40 as a reward to female servants, and a portion on their marriage. A national school for 150 boys and an equal number of girls, is supported by subscription. There are several infant schools, and there are Sabbath schools in connexion with the different congregations, both of the establishment and among the dissenters. The barracks, erected during the late war, have, under the patronage of that father of British soldiers, the late duke of York, been converted into a branch of the military asylum at Chelsea, for the orphan or motherless children of soldiers, whose fathers are absent on service. The buildings are handsome and commodious, and are appropriated to the reception of female children only. The almshouses and the different charitable bequests are too numerous to be here specified. The most ancient of them is the hospital of Domus Dei, founded in the reign of Henry III., partly for a convent of nuns and partly as a chapel to a neighbouring priory. It was burned by the French in the reign of Edward III., and by him bestowed on Queen's college, Oxford. It is filled by a warden, and four brothers, and four sisters, who have besides residence, 2s. each weekly from the college, with a supply of coals from another bequest. Thorner's almshouses accommodate 26 widows, who are allowed each four shillings weekly. A dispensary and lying in hospital are liberally supported by subscription. On the river, about 2 m. above the town, there stood formerly a priory of Black canons. It had at the dissolution, nine religious, with an annual income of £91 9s. "Here were also an hospital dedicated to St Mary Magdalene, and a college of Franciscan or Grey friars." Distance from London, 76½ m. W.S.W. Pop., in 1801, 7629; in 1831, 19,324. A. P., £39,359.

SOUTHARP, a tything in the parish of South Petherton, co. of Somerset. Returns with the parish.

SOUTHAY, a hamlet in the parish of Kingsbury-Episcopi, co. of Somerset, 5 m. N.E. from Ilminster.

SOUTHBOROUGH, a chapelry in the parish of Tunbridge, co. of Kent. A new district church has been erected here by subscription, at an expense of £8,436. The sittings are 486, of which 286 are free. The property and the patronage is vested in five trustees. The village consists of a number of scattered houses situated between Tunbridge and the Wells. It has a free school for educating 50 children. Pop. with the parish.

SOUTH-BURN, a township in the parish of Kirk-Burn, E. R., co. of York, 3½ m. S.W. from Great Driffield. Pop., in 1801, 75; in 1831, 107. A. P., £1,177.

SOUTH-CHURCH, a parish in the hundred of Rochford, co. of Essex. Living, a rectory in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the archbishop of Canterbury, rated at £27 0s. 10d. This parish is bounded on the south by the Thames, and has some excellent oyster beds. Distance from South-End, 1 m. N.N.E. Pop., in 1801, 291; in 1831, 401. A. P., £3206.

SOUTHCOATES, a township in the parish of Drypool, E. R. co. York, 1½ m. E.N.E. from Kingston-upon-Hull. Pop., in 1801, 235; in 1831, 1114. A. P. £7,788.

SOUTHCOT, a tything in the parish of St Mary, Reading, co. of Berks, 1½ m. W.S.W. from Reading. Pop., in 1811, 45; in 1831, 84. A. P. with that of the parish.

SOUTHEASE, a parish in the hundred of Holmatrow, rape of Lewes, co. of Sussex. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Lewes and dio. of Chichester, rated at £16 0s. 10d. Patron, in 1829, Henry Chatfield, Esq. Distance from Lewes, 3¼ m. S.E. Pop., in 1801, 108; in 1831, 142. A. P., £870.

SOUTH-END, a hamlet in the parish of Prittlewell, co. of Essex, situated on the declivity of a hill at the mouth of the Thames, nearly opposite to Sheerness. It is divided into the Lower and the Upper town, the latter the ancient fishing village, consists chiefly of an irregular line of houses lying along the shore, to which several neat rows of houses have been added at the eastern extremity; a small but neat theatre has been erected, which is regularly opened during the fashionable season. The Uppertown, called New South-End, is considered the more fashionable part of the town. It occupies an eminence fronting the sea, and commands fine views of the Nore, Sheerness, and the Medway. A handsome range of houses called the Terrace, has been finished in a beautiful and uniform style, adjoining to which is the Royal Hotel, which contains numerous and elegant suites of apartments, an assembly room 60 feet by 24, music gallery, and other necessary appendages. South-End has of late years become celebrated as a bathing station, the air being dry and salubrious, and the water, though mixed with that of the Thames, clear and salt. Every necessary accommodation has been provided, and a pier of frame work has recently been constructed by an incorporated company of proprietors. The surrounding scenery is rich, and views across the channel from the isle of Thanet, and along the fine hills of Kent, highly picturesque. Distance from Prittlewell, 1½ m. S.S.E. Pop. with the parish.

SOUTH-END (ELTHAM), a hamlet in the parish in Eltham, co. of Kent, 10 m. E.S.E. from St Paul's, London. Pop. with the parish.

SOUTH-END (LEWISHAM), a hamlet in the parish of Lewisham, co. of Kent, 9½ m. S.S.E. from St Paul's, London. Pop. with the parish.

SOUTHERNBY-BOUND, a township in the parish of Castle-Sowerby, co. of Cumberland, 11½ m. N.W. by W. from Penrith. Pop., in 1801, 157; in 1831, 162. A. P. with the parish.

SOUTHERNDOWN, a hamlet and bathing-place in the parish of St Bride, co. of Glamorgan, South Wales, situated on the Bristol channel. It is remarkable for an extensive and firm strand at the foot of a mural cliff of stratified limestone 300 feet in height. Pop., in 1811, 357; in 1831, 340. A. P. with that of the parish.

SOUTHERY, a parish in the hundred of Clackclose, co. of Norfolk. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich, rated at £7 10s. Church ded. to St Mary. Patron, in 1829, Robert Martin, Esq. Distance from Downham-Market, 6½ m. S. Pop., in 1801, 462; in 1831, 737. A. P., £3,059.

SOUTHFIELDS, a liberty in the hundred of Guthlaxton, co. of Leicester. Pop., in 1821, 762; in 1831, 1608. A. P. not returned.

SOUTHFLEET, a parish in the hundred of Axton, lathes of Sutton-at-Hone, co. of Kent. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Rochester, rated at £51 15s. Church ded. to St Nicholas. Patron, the bishop of Rochester. This is named from its relative situation to Northfleet, and from its standing on a fleet, or broad expanse of water, which formerly flowed up from the Thames, and but for the embankment, along which the main road is carried, would do so still. It was anciently a Roman station, and coins, coffins, urns, &c., belonging to that people, have frequently been found. The church contains many beautiful monuments, and a number of ancient brasses, with a very ancient font of admirable workmanship. Here is a free school, endowed by the Sedley family with a rent charge of £20. Distance from Gravesend, 3½ m. S.W. Pop., in 1801, 508; in 1831, 624. A. P., £3,256.

SOUTHGATE, a hamlet in the parish of Pen-Arth, co. of Glamorgan, South Wales, 9 m. S.W. from Swansea. Pop. with the parish.

SOUTHGATE, a chapelry in the parish of Edmonton, co. of Middlesex. Living, a curacy in the archd. of Middlesex and dio. of London, endowed with the estate of Orsett, in the co. of Essex. Patron, the vicar of Edmonton. This is a handsome village, situated on the New River at the south gate, whence its name, or entrance into Enfield chase. The neighbourhood is well wooded. The duke of Buckingham has a residence here, in whose grounds there is a fine old oak tree, that covers with its shade nearly an acre of ground. In Camp-field, which lies adjacent to this place, several pieces of cannon have been dug up, and a gorget that had belonged to Oliver Cromwell, having his initials handsomely inlaid with jewels. This curious relic is deposited in the British museum. Here is a place of worship belonging to the Independents, and a Lancasterian school. There is, besides, a bequest for educating nine boys and nine girls. Distance from London, 8 m. N. by W. Returns with those of the parish.

SOUTH-HILL, a parish in the hundred of East, co. of Cornwall. Living, a rectory with the curacy of Callington, annexed to the archd. of Cornwall and dio. of Exeter, rated at £38. Church ded. to St Sampson. Patron, in 1829, Lord Clinton. There is here a bequest of £5 per annum for educating the children of the poor. Distance from Callington, 4 m. N.W. Pop., in 1801, 447; in 1831, 530. A. P., £2,622.

SOUTH-HILL, a parish and township in the hundred of Wixamtree, co. of Bedford. Living, a discharged vicarage with that of Old-Warden, annexed to the archd. of Bedford and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £11 15s. Church ded. to All Saints. Patron, in 1829, W. H. Whitbread, Esq. In the church is the following inscription to the memory of the unfortunate Admiral Byng:—"To the perpetual disgrace of public justice, the honourable John Byng, vice-admiral of the blue, fell a martyr to political persecution on March 14th, 1757, when bravery and loyalty were insufficient securities for the life and honour of a naval officer." The Baptists have here a place of worship. Distance from Biggleswade, 4 m. W.S.W. Pop., in 1801, of the township, 621; of the entire parish, 985; in 1831, of the former, 675; of the latter, 1267. A. P., of the entire parish, £4,250.

SOUTH-MEAD, an extra-parochial hamlet in the middle division of the hundred of Dudstone and King's-Barton, co. of Gloucester. It lies adjacent to, and south of the city of Gloucester. Pop., in 1801, 60; in 1831, 834. A. P., £1,629.

SOUTHHOE, a parish in the hundred of Toesland, co. of Huntingdon. Living, a vicarage with the curacy of Hale-Weston, in the archd. of Huntingdon and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £14 2s. 3½d. Church ded. to St Leonard. Patroness, in 1829, Miss Pointer. Distance from St Neots, 3½ m. N.W. Pop., in 1801, 234; in 1831, 283. A. P., £2,049.

SOUTHORPE, an extra-parochial township in the north division of the wapentake of Corringham, parts of Lindsey, co. of Lincoln, 7 m. N.E. from Gainsborough. Pop., in 1801, 26; in 1831, 36. A. P., £655.

SOUTHORPE, a hamlet in the parish of Barnack, co. of Northampton, 3 m. N.E. from Wandsford. Pop., in 1811, 92; in 1831, 137. A. P., with that of the parish.

SOUTHORPE, a township in the parish of Hook-Norton, or Norton-Hook, co. of Oxford. 5 m. N.N.E. from Chipping-Norton. Pop. with the parish.

SOUTHOVER, a parish in the hundred of Barcombe, rape of Lewes, co. of Sussex. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Lewes and dio. of Chichester, rated at £6 12s. Church ded. to St John the Baptist. Patron, the king. Here was formerly a celebrated priory [see LEWES]. Distance from Lewes, ¼ m. S. Pop., in 1801, 487; in 1831, included with that of St Thomas-in-the-Cliff.

SOUTHPORT, a chapelry in the parish of North-Meols, co.-palatine of Lancaster, situated at the mouth of the Ribble, on the shore of the Irish sea. It consists of one principal street, the houses built of brick, and ornamented with gardens in front, and is much frequented in the summer season for sea-bathing, for which it possesses every requisite accommodation. The chapel, called Christ Church, was built in 1820. Patron, — Hesketh, Esq. The Independents and the Methodists have also places of worship in the village. Here is 'the Strangers Charity,' formed for the express purpose of affording to the valetudinary poor the benefits of sea air and bathing; a dispensary has also been erected for furnishing the necessary medical aid. Distance from Ormskirk, 9 m. N.W. Pop. with the parish.

SOUTHREPPS, a parish in the hundred of North-Erpingham, co. of Norfolk. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich, rated at £16. Distance from North-Walsbam, 4 m. N. Pop., in 1801, 571; in 1831, 733. A. P., £2,624.

SOUTHROP, a parish in the hundred of Brightwell's-Barrow, co. of Gloucester. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester, rated at £5 16s. 8d. Church ded. to St Peter. Patron, the master and fellows of Wadham college, Oxford. Distance from Lechlade, 2 m. N. Pop., in 1801, 238; in 1831, 350. A. P., £1,937.

SOUTHROP, a tything in the parish of Herriard, co. of Southampton, 5 m. N.W. from Alton. Pop. with the parish.

SOUTH-TEIGN, a tything in the parish of Chagford, co. of Devon, termed Terra Regis, the tenants, with the exception of one mill, being all free. Pop. with the parish.

SOUTH-TOWN, a parish in the hundred of Mutford and Lothingland, co. of Suffolk. Living, a discharged rectory with the vicarage of Gorleston, in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich, not in charge. The church—now in ruins—was ded. to St Nicholas. Patron, the rector of Gorleston. South-Town, called also Little Yarmouth, forms a populous suburb to the borough of Yarmouth, in the co. of Norfolk. It extends from Yarmouth-bridge to the southward, about half a mile along the west bank of the river, one side of the road being occupied by elegant private houses, the other with wharfs, docks, and yards for ship-building. Distance from Great-Yarmouth, 1 m. S.W. Pop., in 1831, 1304. A. P. not returned separately.

SOUTHWARK. See article LONDON.

SOUTHWELL and SCROOBY, a liberty in the co. of Nottingham. It lies in the southern part of the co., and comprises 18 parishes, including the town of Southwell. Pop., in 1831, £11,051.

SOUTHWELL, a market-town and parish in the liberty of Southwell and Scrooby, co. of Nottingham. Living, a discharged vicarage in the peculiar jurisdiction of the chapter, rated at £7 13s. 4d., returned at £110. The church—the only one in England, that of Rippon excepted, which is both parochial and collegiate—is ded. to St Mary. Patron, the presbiterary of Normanton. The town, which is pleasantly situated on a gentle and richly-wood-cul eminence near the small river Greet, celebrated for the abundance and excellence of its red trout, is surrounded by an amphitheatre of hills, of various elevation, and derived its name from one of the numerous wells that formerly existed in this neighbourhood, only a few of which are now to be met with. It is very ancient, and was distinguished as the site of one of the first Christian churches erected in this part of the country. The houses are, in general, well built, the streets carefully paved, and its general appearance is neat and prepossessing. The principal trade is in malt and hops. There are a few tanyards, and, on the river, a mill for throwing silk. A suite of rooms, for the purpose of accommodating assemblies, have recently been erected, with a bandomoe theatre, and a harmonic society has long been well supported. The air of the place is accounted salubrious, and fine walks abound in the neighbourhood. The market is held on Saturday; and there are fairs on Whit-Monday, and October 21st. The town is divided into two separate jurisdictions, called the Burrage and the Prebendage. The former, called also the Soke of Southwell-cum-Scrooby, includes 20 townships, for which courts of session are held quarterly by a Custos Rotulorum, and justices of the peace, nominated by the archbishop of York and the chapter of Southwell, for the trial of all but capital offenders. The latter includes 28 parishes, over which the collegiate chapter, with their vicar-general, exercise ecclesiastical jurisdiction, and all episcopal functions, confirmation and ordination excepted. The local police is regulated by a constable or bailiff, and two head boroughs, for each of the four districts into which the town is divided, viz. the Burrage, the Hightown, Easthorpe, and Westhorpe. Easthorpe has a house of industry, and in Burrage is a house of correction for the county, built at different times, but completed in 1829, comprising yards, work-shops, tread-mill, chapel, infirmary, governor's-house, &c. &c. The church, founded here in the early part of the 7th century, by Paulinus, a missionary, sent into England by Pope Gregory VII., at the request of Ethelburga, wife of Edwin, king of Northumberland, being made collegiate, the town seems to have gradually formed around it, and to have flourished, under the special favour of the prelates of York, till the dissolution of the monasteries by Henry VIII., when the archbishop and the prebendaries of Southwell surrendered the church into the possession of that monarch, by whom, at the request of Cranmer, the chapter was re-founded in 1541. Southwell, two years after, was erected into a see in favour of Dr Cox, hence translated to Ely. By Edward VI., soon after his accession to the throne, the chapter was dissolved, and the prebendal estates granted to John, earl of Warwick. That nobleman being soon afterwards attainted, these estates reverted to the crown, and were restored by Queen Mary, who re-established the chapter upon its ancient foundation. By Queen Elizabeth it was finally confirmed, and reduced to its present form. It has 16 prebendaries, all in the patronage of the archbishop of York, six vicars-choral, six singing-men, six choristers, six singing boys, &c. &c. Here was a splendid archiepiscopal palace, in which Charles I., during the civil war, frequently held his court; and at the King's Arms Inn, now the Saracen's-Head, in this town, that infatuated tyrant, as a last resource for regaining his lost power, surrendered himself to the Scottish commissioners, May 6th, 1646. During their stay in the town, the parliamentary troops converted the church into a stable, broke the monuments, defaced the ornaments, and the palace of the archbishop they nearly demolished. All of that princely pile, which was the residence of Cardinal Wolsey during the last summer which he was permitted to see, now remaining, is the chapel and the great hall, which have been fitted up as a private residence.

The church of Southwell is a very noble cruciform structure, chiefly of Norman, with portions of the early decorated and later styles of English architecture. A low tower rises from the centre, and two, each of seven stages, richly ornamented, from the west end. Between these towers is the principal entrance through a fine semicircular arch, with a large window above it of the later style, highly enriched with elegant tracery. The nave and transepts are Norman. The former, which is divided from the aisles, and supported by a range of low, massive, circular columns and arches, has a flat roof of panelled oak richly carved. The roof of the aisles is finely groined in stone. The arches and piers supporting the central tower, are, from their simplicity of style and stateliness of elevation, strikingly beautiful, and the choir and the eastern transepts are specimens of the early English style, perhaps unrivalled for purity of design and fidelity of minute detail. The stalls and screen are of a later style, but very beautiful. The charity, or singing school, on the east side of the north transept, has been converted into a library for the college, and contains a very extensive and valuable collection of books, especially on divinity. On the north side of the church is the chapter-house, of decorated pointed architecture, with an elegantly ornamented door-way, and there are houses for the prebends, all handsome buildings.

Besides the established church, there are here places of worship for the Baptists and the Wesleyan Methodists. Here is a free grammar school, under the patronage of the collegiate chapter, open for gratuitous instruction to the boys of the town, with two scholarships in St John's college, Cambridge, for boys who have been choristers in the collegiate church. Various benefactions have been left at different times for clothing and educating the children of the poor, and there are Sabbath schools in connexion with the different congregations in the town. The ruins of the episcopal palace, overspread with ivy, form an interesting ornament to the town. The northern portion of the building is nearly entire, and has been fitted up as a modern residence. The extensive quadrangle has been converted into a garden. A very large gold ring, with the inscription, Mieu moser qui change ma foi, on the inside, was dug up here in 1780; and in 1823, a large brass seal, with the device of a female kneeling and holding in her right hand a tilting spear, bearing a breast-plate, out of which rises a unicorn's head, and in her left hand a shield, with the arms of Cavendish and Kemp quartered, and on a scroll encircling the device, the legend, 'Gorge Rygmayden,' in Saxon characters. This seal has been presented to the museum at York. Distance from Nottingham, 14 m. N.E.; from London, 132 m. N.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 2305; in 1831, 3384. A. P., £10,462.

SOUTHWELL-PARK. See HARGRAVE.

SOUTHWICK, a township in the parish of Monk-Wearmouth, co.-palatine of Durham. This township, lying along the banks of the Wear, has considerable manufactories of glass and earthenware, several yards for ship-building, and a number of lime-kilns. Human bones, sometimes entire skeletons, are found in removing the soil above the limestone in Southwick hills. Distance from Sunderland, $1\frac{1}{2}$ m. N.W. by W. Pop., in 1801, 554; in 1831, 1301. A. P., £1,805.

SOUTHWICK, a parish in the hundred of Wilbybrook, co. of Northampton. Living, a discharged vicar in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough, rated at £8 7s. 6d. Church ded. to St Mary. Patron, in 1829, F. Lynn, Esq. Distance from Northampton, $2\frac{1}{2}$ m. N.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 104; in 1831, 154. A. P., £2,190.

SOUTHWICK, a parish in the hundred of Portsdown, Portsdown division of the co. of Southampton. Living, a curacy in the archd. and dio. of Winchester, not in charge. Church ded. to St James. Patron, in 1829, T. Thistlethwayte, Esq. The publicans of Southwick are exempted from having soldiers billeted upon them; and it possessed a priory of Black canons, the revenues of which, at the dissolution, were estimated at £314 17s. 10d. per annum. In this priory Henry VI. was united to Margaret of Anjou, and there are still some remains of the buildings to be seen in Southwick-Park. The manor-house here was the residence of Charles I. at the time his profligate minister, Buckingham, was assassinated at Portsmouth by Felton. It is a large embattled building of considerable antiquity. A market, granted to the priory, has long been disused; but a fair is still held April 5th, chiefly for horses. Distance from Fareham, $3\frac{1}{2}$ m. E.N.E. Pop., in 1801, 569; in 1831, 723. A. P., £4,602.

SOUTHWICK, a parish in the hundred of Fibergate, rape of Bramber, co. of Sussex. Living, a discharged rector in the archd. of Lewes and dio. of Chichester, rated at £9 13s. 9½d. Church ded. to St Michael. Patron, the king. There is here a small bequest for educating poor children. Distance from New-Shoreham, $1\frac{1}{2}$ m. E. Pop., in 1801, 271; in 1831, 502. A. P., £1,289.

SOUTHWICK, a chapel in the parish of North-Bradley, co. of Wilts. Living, a curacy to the vicarage of North-Bradley, in the archd. and dio. of Salisbury, endowed with £3,400 by parliamentary grant, and by £1200 private benefaction. There are also places of worship for the Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists. Distance from Trowbridge, $2\frac{1}{2}$ m. S.S.W. Pop., in 1801, 1146; in 1831, 1452. A. P., £3,399.

SOUTHWOLD, a seaport, market-town, and parish, having separate jurisdiction though locally in the hundred of Blything, co. of Suffolk. Living, a curacy to the vicarage of Reydon, in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich, not in charge, returned at £82 2s. The church—a most superb edifice, having a lofty tower surmounted by an elegant spire, constructed of free stone intermixed with flint of various colours—is ded. to St Edmund. The town is situated upon an eminence, nearly surrounded by the river Blythe, at its influx into the German sea. It contains many good houses, a guild-hall, gaol, &c., and has a considerable sea-trade, the harbour having been greatly improved by the construction of two piers, and the clearing out of the haven, which had been choked up with sand. A breakwater has also been constructed beneath Gun-Hill cliff, to prevent the encroachments of the sea, which had become serious. Red herrings and red sprats are cured here in large quantities. Salt is also manufactured, and malt forms an important article in the trade of the town. Possessing a fine beach, Southwold has, for some years back, been much resorted to for sea-bathing. For the accommodation of the visitors every convenience has been provided, a fine promenade formed, a reading-room furnished; there is a good assembly room, and races are held annually. On the cliffs are two batteries, mounting 6 eighteen pounders, presented to the town by William, duke of Cumberland, who landed here from the continent, October 17th, 1745. Formerly there was here an ancient fort, supposed to have been thrown up by the Danes in 1010; some parts of it are still visible on Eye-cliff. Fossil remains of the mammoth and the elephant have been found in the neighbourhood. This part of the coast is also remarkable for the early arrival and the late departure of the swallow. The bay too, called Southwold-bay, or more commonly Sole-bay, is remarkable for the sanguinary naval engagement with the Dutch in 1672, when the British fleet was commanded by the duke of York, afterwards James VII. The combatants were parted by the darkness of the night, during which the Dutch withdrew their shattered fleet, which the British, being equally shattered, were unable to follow.

The town was made corporate by Henry VII., and is governed by a high-steward, twelve aldermen, two bailiffs, and a recorder. The high-steward and bailiffs are justices of the peace, and hold sessions regularly for the trial of felonies and other offences. The same persons hold a court of record every Monday, for the recovery of debts to any amount. A dreadful fire, in 1659, consumed nearly the whole town, and among other public matters destroyed all the court-baron rolls, in consequence of which the whole body of copy-holders under the corporation became freeholders. The market-day is Thursday, and there are fairs for toys on Trinity Monday and St Bartholomew's day. Besides the established church there are places of worship for the Baptists, the Independents, and the Wesleyan Methodists. Distance from Ipswich, 36 m. N.E.; from London, 104 m. N.E. Pop., in 1801, 1054; in 1831, 1875. A. P., £1,849.

Living, a curacy, subordinate to the vicarage of Halifax, in the archd. and dio. of York, certified at £6, returned at £144 17s. 5d. Patron, the vicar of Halifax. An elegant and spacious chapel has recently been erected here, of which a third part of the sittings are free. There is also a chapel belonging to the Wesleyan Methodists. The Calder, on which there are a great number of corn mills, and three large iron foundries, passes near this village, as does also the Rochdale canal. Cotton and woollen manufactures are carried on here to a considerable extent. Distance from Halifax, 2½ m. S.W. by W. Pop. with the parish.

SOWERBY-CASTLE, a parish in Leath ward, co. of Cumberland. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Carlisle, rated at £17 10s. 5d. Church ded. to St Kentigern. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Carlisle. This parish takes its appellation from a hill called the Castle-hill, which has spacious roads cut in the rock, and leading to the summit, on which is a large circular cavity with a narrow entrance, in which it is supposed cattle were secured against the inroads of the marauding borderers. Here is a small bequest for educating poor children. Distance from Penrith, 12 m. W.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 937; in 1831, 961. A. P., £7,254.

Patron, the bishop of Exeter. Here is a small annuity, upon which five poor children are educated. Distance from Exeter, 4 m. E. Pop., in 1801, 318; in 1831, 391. A. P., £2,275.

SOYLAND, a township in the parish of Halifax, W. R., co. of York, 5½ m. S.W. from Halifax. Cotton and woollen manufactures are carried on here to a large extent. Pop., in 1801, 1888; in 1831, 3589. A. P., £4,757.

SPALDING, a market-town and parish in the wapentake of Elloe, parts of Holland, co. of Lincoln. Living, a curacy in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln, certified at £70. The church, a beautiful light structure with a handsome spire, is ded. to St Mary and St Nicholas. Patron, in 1829, W. Willesby, Esq. The town, which takes its name from a spa or spring of chalybeate water in the market-place, is situated on the river Welland, by which it is nearly surrounded. The streets are clean and remarkably well-paved, the houses handsome and abundantly supplied with water. It has a spacious market-place, a neat small theatre, assembly and card rooms, a prison, and a substantial brick built town-hall, in the upper part of which the various courts are held. The lower part of the building is occupied as shops. This town is a member of the port of Boston, and since the Welland has been made navigable, has carried on a considerable trade in coals, corn, and wool. The principal support, however, of the inhabitants, is agriculture and grazing. Very large quantities of hemp and flax are grown in the neighbourhood. Here was formerly an antiquarian society, of which Sir Isaac Newton, Sir Hans Sloane, Dr Stukeley, and other distinguished names, were members. The room appropriated to the meetings of this society is now used for a permanent subscription library. Quarter-sessions for the parts of Holland are held here regularly, and petty-sessions for the wapentake of Elloe once a week. Here are also held courts of sewers, courts of requests, courts-leet, courts-baron, &c. The Baptists, Society of Friends, Independents, and Wesleyan Methodists, have all places of worship here. There is a free grammar school endowed with 89 acres of land, to which several additions have been made. The school is open to the children of all householders in the parish. The Petit school has an endowment of 60 acres of land. The Blue-coat has a small endowment in land, and is aided by voluntary contributions. Here are two almshouses, one for 22 poor persons, and one for eight, and there are considerable estates vested in trustees for the benefit of the poor. Here was an abbey valued at the dissolution at £878 18s. 3d. per annum; part of the buildings still remain. Distance from Lincoln, 44 m. S.S.E.; from London, 100 m. N. Church—ancient and spacious, built of flints, having a tower embattled and quoined with freestone—is ded. to St Mary. Patrons, the master and fellows of Eton college. Here was an alien priory of Black monks, the revenues of which were given by Henry VI. to the endowing of Eton college. A small rent charge is appropriated to the educating of eight boys. Distance from Swaffham, 3 m. N.E. Pop., in 1801, 503; in 1831, 746. A. P., £3,622.

SPOTLANDS, FURTHERSIDE AND NEARER-SIDE, two townships, forming a chapelry in the parish of Rochdale, co.-palatine of Lancaster. Living, a curacy in the archd. and dio. of Chester, not in charge. Patron the vicar of Rochdale. This chapelry forms an extensive suburb to the town of Rochdale, in the extensive cotton trade of which it has a large proportion. It has a free school endowed with £31 per annum. Pop., in 1801, 9031; in 1831, 15,325. A. P., £21,901.

SPRATTON, a parish in the hundred of Spelthoe, co. of Northampton. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough, rated at £15. Church ded. to St Luke. Patron, in 1829, Robert Andrew, Esq. The tower of the church, surmounted by an octagonal spire, is considered a fine specimen of the Anglo-Saxon style of architecture. Distance from Northampton, 7 m. N.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 850; in 1831, 1012. A. P., £4,130.

SPREYTON, a parish in the hundred of Wonford, co. of Devon. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Exeter, rated at £10 5s. 8d. Church ded. to St Michael. Patron, in 1829, R. Holland, Esq. A lead mine is worked here, though, it is said, with little profit. Distance from Oakhampton, 8 m. E.N.E. Pop., in 1801, 333; in 1831, 423. A. P., £1,770.

SPRIDLINGTON, a parish in the east division of the wapentake of Aslaoce, parts of Lindsey, co. of Lincoln. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Stow and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £11 10s. Church ded. to St Hilary. Patron, in 1829, the Rev. Frederick Gildart. Distance from Market-Raisen, 9 m. W.S.W. Pop., in 1801, 126; in 1831, 250. A. P., £1,732.

SPRINGFIELD, a parish in the hundred of Chelmsford, co. of Essex. Living, a rectory in two portions, but consolidated by Bishop Sherlock, in the archd. of Essex and dio. of London, rated, Bosworth's portion at £11 6s. 8d., Richard's portion at £11 4s. 9d. Church ded. to All Saints. Patrons, in 1829, the trustees under the marriage settlement of the earl of Arran. This parish, which derives its name from the great number of springs within its boundaries, is watered by the Chelmer. Goldsmith is said to have written the Deserted Village, while he resided at a farm-house opposite the church here; and Joseph Strutt, engraver and antiquary, was born here. Distance from Chelmsford, 1 m. N.E. Pop., in 1801, 889; in 1831, 1851. A. P., £7,545.

SPRINGTHORPE, a parish in the wapentake of Corringham, parts of Lindsey, co. of Lincoln. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £14 3s. 4d. Church ded. to St George and St Lawrence. Patron, the lord-chancellor. Distance from Gainsborough, 4 m. E.S.E. Pop., in 1801, 176; in 1831, 194. A. P., £811.

SPROATLEY, a parish in the middle division of the wapentake of Holderness, E. R., co. of York. Living, a rectory in the archd. of the E. R. and dio. of York, rated at £7 0s. 10d. Church—modern built, of white brick—ded. to All Saints.—The old one was ded. to St Swithin. Patron, the earl of Cardigan. Here is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists, and a school with an endowment worth £90 per annum. Distance from Kingston-upon-Hull, 7 m. E.N.E. Pop., in 1801, 232; in 1831, 366. A. P., £2,003.

SPROSTON, a township in the parish of Middlewich, co.-palatine of Chester, 2½ m. E. from Middlewich. Pop., in 1801, 150; in 1831, 128. A. P., £1,512.

SPROTBOROUGH, a parish and township in the lower division of the wapentake of Strathforth and Tickhill, W. R., co. of York. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of York, rated at £44 18s. 9d. Church ded. to St Mary. Patron, in 1829, S. J. Copley, Bart. Here was an hospital ded. to St Edmund, the revenues of which, at the dissolution, were valued at £9 13s. 11d. Distance from Doncaster, 3 m. W.S.W. Pop., in 1801, of the township, 250; of the entire parish, 405; in 1831, of the former, 322; of the latter, 500. A. P. of the township, £4,655; of the entire parish, £6,089.

SPROUGHTON, a parish in the hundred of Samford, co. of Suffolk. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Norwich, rated at £20 18s. 9d. Church ded. to All Saints. Patron, in 1829, the marquess of Bristol. This parish is intersected by the Stow-Market and Ipswich navigation. Distance from Ipswich, 3 m. W.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 353; in 1831, 524. A. P., £3,555.

SPROWSTON, a parish in the hundred of Taverham. Living, a curacy in the archd. and dio. of Norwich, not in charge, returned at £48 7s. 6d. Church ded. to St Mary and St Margaret. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Norwich. Miles Corbet, one of the judges who signed the warrant for the execution of Charles I., has in the church here a marble monument, on which are carved figures of himself and his two wives. Distance from Norwich, 3 m. N.N.E. Pop., in 1801, 248; in 1831, 1179. A. P., £2,349.

SPROXTON, a parish in the hundred of Framland, co. of Leicester. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Leicester and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £7 4s. 4d., returned at £100. Church ded. to St Bartholomew. Patron, in 1829, the duke of Rutland. This parish is watered by the small river Eye, and it has one chapel for Wesleyan Methodists. Distance from Melton-Mowbray, 8 m. N.E. by E. Pop., in 1801, 260; in 1831, 378. A. P., £2,282.

SPROXTON, a township in the parish of Helmsley, N. R., co. of York, 2 m. S. from Helmsley. Pop., in 1801, 213; in 1831, 195. A. P., £2,230.

SPURSTOW, a township in the parish of Bunbury, co.-palatine of Chester. Here is a mineral spring called Spurstow-Spa, over which baths have been erected, and formerly the concourse of visitants was very considerable. At present it is rather out of repute. Distance from Tarporley, 4 m. S.S.E. Pop., in 1801, 339; in 1831, 588. A. P., £1,929.

STADHAMPTON, a parish in the hundred of Dorchester, co. of Oxford. Living, a curacy, a peculiar of Dorchester, endowed with £600 royal bounty, £400 parliamentary grant, and £16 per annum private benefaction.

Church ded. to St John the Baptist. Patron, in 1829, C. Peers, Esq. This parish was the birth-place of the eminently pious and learned nonconformist divine, Dr John Owen. He was dean of Christ-church, and vice-chancellor of the university of Oxford in the time of the commonwealth. The Thame waters the parish on the west. Distance from Oxford, 8 m. E.S.E. Pop., in 1801, 193; in 1831, 313. A. P., £1,282.

STADMERSLOW, a township in the parish of Wolstanton, co. of Stafford. Pop., in 1811, 151; in 1831, 290.

STAFFIELD, or STAFOL, a township in the parish of Kirk-Oswald, co. of Cumberland, 1½ m. N.N.W. from Kirk-Oswald. Pop., in 1801, 276; in 1831, 265. A. P., £3,274.

STAFFORD,

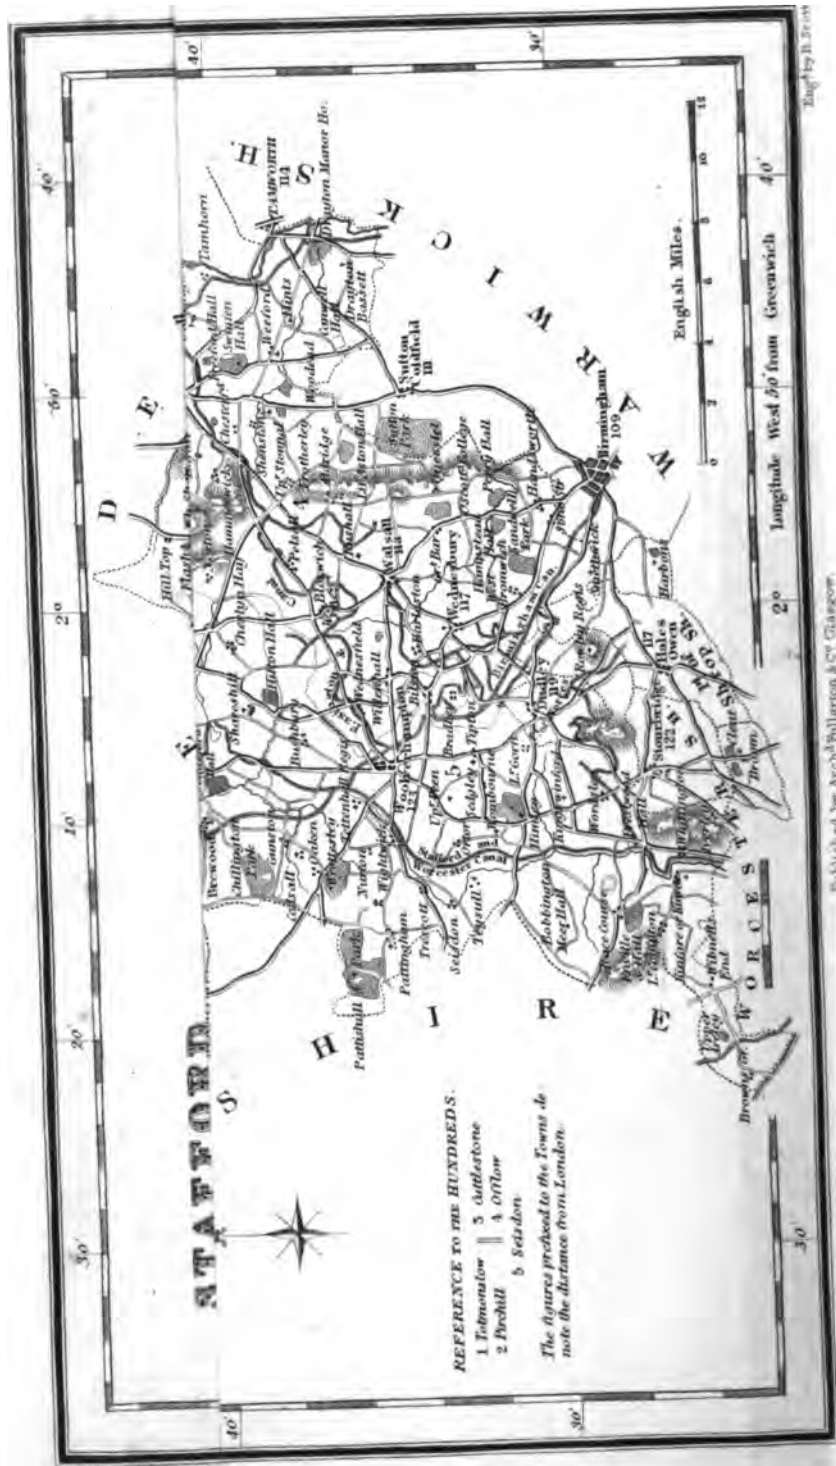

A borough, market-town, and parish, having separate jurisdiction, locally in the south division of the hundred of Pirehill, co. of Stafford, of which co. it is the capital. The living comprises the united parishes of St Mary and St Chad, in the archd. of Stafford and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, the former not in charge. Patron, the lord-chancellor. The latter certified at £7 10s., returned at £49. Patron, the prebendary of Pipe-Minor in Lichfield cathedral. The church of St Mary—formerly collegiate for a dean and 13 prebendaries, the deanery being valued, the 26th of Henry VIII., at £35 13s. 10d.; the 13 prebendaries taken together at £38 per annum—is an ancient cruciform structure, in the early style of English architecture, with a lofty octagonal tower rising from the intersection, the upper part of which is of later date. The north entrance is ornamented with delicate shafts and bold hollows, enriched with flowers and foliage. The arrangement of the interior is in the highest degree beautiful. The pews and arches are of the early English, passing into the decorated style, and to the east of the transepts, gradually diminishing in height. The windows are intermixed, but are generally in the decorated style. The east window is an elegant specimen of the later English style. The chancel is spacious, the roof being supported on finely pointed arches and piers of clustered columns. The north transept has an ancient font of great beauty, and there are many ancient monuments. The church of St Chad is a small edifice, originally in the Norman style, but defaced by modern additions.

Description.—The town of Stafford is pleasantly situated on the east bank of the Sow, about six miles above its confluence with the Trent. The entrance into the town, from the London road, is by a substantial bridge, formerly one of the ancient gates. The houses are in general well built, though the material is brick, and, especially those of modern date, many of them elegant. The county-hall, a large stone building, forms one side of a spacious square which serves as the market-place. An upper apartment in this building is occupied as an armory, in which are deposited the arms of the Staffordshire militia. The county-gaol and house of correction is also a spacious and substantial modern building. It comprises the governor's house, a chapel in which divine service is performed every Sunday, and twice during the week, an infirmary, a school-room, 19 wards, 19 day-rooms, 17 work-rooms, 19 airing-yards, and two tread-mills, one of them for grinding corn, the other for raising water for the supply of the prison. The situation is airy and healthy, and the regulations are reported to be excellent. The principal trade is the tanning of leather, and manufacturing it into shoes for the London market. Ale is made of an excellent quality, but not in great quantity. The market is on Saturday; and there are fairs April 5th, May 14th, June 25th, October 3d, and December 5th.

Municipal Government.—Stafford is an ancient borough. Its first formal charter was granted by King John, confirming all privileges exercised before that time. It bears date 1208, being a year prior to that of London, and seven to the signing of Magna Charta. This charter was forfeited in 1826, vacancies not having been filled up according to the terms prescribed by it. A new one, however, was obtained the following year, 1827, restoring and confirming all former privileges, the exemption of serving on juries alone excepted. The government is vested in a mayor, 10 aldermen, 10 principal burgesses, a recorder, town-clerk, and other inferior officers. The mayor and two senior aldermen are justices of the peace within the borough, and the corporation hold, or have power to hold, courts quarterly within the borough, for trying all offences not capital. All causes, however, requiring the decision of a jury, they transfer to the judges travelling the circuit. They have also power to hold a court of record for the recovery of debts to any amount. No court of the kind has, however, been held for a considerable number of years. The borough sends two members to parliament. The right of election is enjoyed by about 490 voters on the new principle of franchise. Formerly the whole resident burgesses voted. The mayor is the returning officer. The freedom of the town is inherited by birth, obtained by servitude, or may be purchased.

History.—Stafford was originally called Stadedford, from the Saxon Stade, signifying a place on a river. It is said to have been chosen as a place of devotional retirement by St Bertelin, the son of a Mercian king, in 706, the hermitage of the saint having been the first residence occupied in this now populous town. In 918, Ethelfleda, countess of Mercia, surrounded it with a wall and fosse, and erected a castle on the north side of the river. Edward the Elder, brother to Ethelfleda, shortly after the erection of the castle, built a tower, the site of which is supposed to have been the mount which Speed has noticed under the name of Castle-hill. From this period to the Conquest the town seems to have increased considerably. In Doomsday-book it is called a city, in which the king had 18 burgesses in demesne, and the earls of Mercia 20 mansions.

Out of all the manors in the county, the Conqueror reserved this only for himself; and here, to keep the barons in subjection, he built a castle, appointing, as governor, Robert de Toeni, on whom he bestowed all the other manors in the county, with the title of Baron de Stafford. Ralph de Stafford, a celebrated warrior in the reign of Edward III., rebuilt the castle, which, in the time of the parliamentary wars, being held for Charles, was besieged by the parliamentary forces, and taken and demolished. It has been begun to be rebuilt in modern times, but only one front and two round towers have been completed.

Benevolent Institutions.—Besides the established church there are here places of worship for the Society of Friends, the Independents, the Wesleyan Methodists of the Old and the New connexion, and a Roman Catholic chapel. A free grammar school is endowed, with an annual revenue of £370, two-thirds of which is paid to the master, and one to the usher, who most probably performs the whole of the duty. It is open to all boys of the town, and there are no less than 13 upon the establishment! A Lancasterian school is supported by subscription, and there are Sabbath schools in connexion with the different congregations belonging to the town. There are twelve almshouses, inhabited by poor families who receive a weekly allowance from the corporation. There is also here an excellent institution for the relief of widows and orphans of poor clergymen of the archdeaconry, the several peculiars, and county of Stafford. It is supported by annual subscriptions and by donations. The county infirmary, situated here, is capable of accommodating 80 patients, who receive professional assistance from two physicians, three surgeons, and a chaplain, attached to the institution. The average number of patients admitted through the course of the year is about 600, besides out-patients to the amount of 800, who receive advice and medicines at their own dwellings. This institution has funded property to the amount of between £2,000 and £3,000, and is further supported by donations and annual subscriptions. A lunatic asylum for the county is also established here, with funds nearly equal to those of the infirmary, besides being liberally supported by donations and annual subscriptions. The buildings belonging to this institution are spacious and well-adapted to promote the health and comfort of the inmates. The gardens and pleasure grounds comprise 30 acres, and a small stream running through the inclosure gives to it an air of lively gayety peculiarly suitable to the purpose for which it was planned. The arrangements and the general management of the place is highly commended, and it ranks among the principal establishments of the kind in the island. We have already noticed the church which was collegiate here, and there was besides a priory of Black canons, ded. to St Thomas à Becket, the yearly revenues of which at the suppression, were estimated at £198 0s. 9d. Here was also an hospital, ded. to St John, a Sytell or free chapel, ded. to St Leonard, together with houses of Austin and Grey friars, the latter of which at the dissolution, had a revenue of £35 10s. 10d. per ann. That of St John was £10, that of St Leonard £4 12s. 4d. Isaac Walton, the well-known author of the art of angling, was a native of this town, which gives the title of baron to the family of Jerminham, and that of marquess to the family of Gower. Distance from London, 136 m. N.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 3927; in 1831, 6098. A. P., £5,780.

STAFFORDSHIRE,

An inland county, situated nearly in the centre of South Britain, bounded on the N.N.W. by Cheshire; on the N.N.E. and E. by Derbyshire; on the S.E. by Warwickshire; on the S. by Worcestershire; and on the W. by Shropshire. Its extreme length from N. to S. is about 55, and its extreme breadth about 24 miles, including an area of 1148 square miles, or 734,720 acres. The surface of this county is of a very diversified character. The northern part called the moorlands, constitutes the southern extremity of that long and rugged mountainous range, which, extending hence, runs through the north portion of Derbyshire and along the western confines of Yorkshire. The moorlands comprise large tracts of waste land appropriated almost solely to the pasturing of sheep. Extensive portions of them are inclosed with stone walls, the only fence to be seen in this part of the country; but in these inclosures there are no subdivisions, and large breadths, seldom trodden by the foot, seem never to have felt the hand of man. Pleasant spots occur here and there, such as the vale in which is situated the town of Cheddle, but it is inclosed by high barren hills, composed of huge heaps of gravel. The wastes among these hills extend far and wide in every direction, their sole produce being heath, broom, whortle berries, and mountain cinquefoil. To the north of this commences an extensive tract of limestone country, comprising an area of 50 or 60 square miles. This is by far the most valuable part of the moorlands, the soil naturally producing a fine herbage. The hills here—which are immense masses of limestone—rise to a considerable height in various places, presenting huge perpendicular cliffs. In the southern part of this district the Weaver hills rise in common with the principal peaks of the moorlands, to the height of 1000 feet above the level of the sea, and command most delightfully extensive views. Of the other parts of the moorlands, extensive tracts, notwithstanding their great elevation, are entirely soft wet peat moors or moss, such as on Morrage, Axedge, the Cloud-heath, High-Forest, Leek-Frith, and Mole-Cop. Of these hills the summits generally terminate in huge cliffs, composed of a coarse grit stone. This is particularly the case with Leek-Rocks and Ipstone's Sharp-cliffs, which are strikingly rugged and precipitous, the vale below being heaped with prodigious masses shaken from their frowning summits by the imperceptible but irresistible hand of time. One of the most serious obstacles indeed to the improvement of these districts rises from the huge accumulation of stones scattered over them, or rising above them. Of these masses, besides those already noticed, are Wetley rocks, those on the High-Forest, the Cloud-heath, and Mole-Cop common, with the waste lying to the north of it. The middle and southern parts of the county are, with some exceptions, level or finely diversified by gentle eminences. From this description, however, must be excepted the limestone hills of Dudley and Sedgley, the parish of Rowley-Regis occupying principally an isolated mountain terminating in various peaks, the loftiest called Turner's-Hill, being 900 feet above high water mark in the Thames at Brentford. This is, however, the highest ground in the south of the county. The hills of Clent—in the detached portion of the county lying to the south of Stourbridge in Worcestershire—are but little inferior to those of Rowley. Barbeacon rises nearly to the height of 700 feet above the level of the sea, and there are others of less elevation which afford most delightful views of this and the neighbouring counties.

Rivers.—The principal rivers are the Trent, the Dove, the Tame, the Blythe, the Penk, and the Sow. The Trent, considered the third largest river in England, rising from New-Pool near Biddulph, on the borders of Cheshire, flows to the south through the district of the potteries, to Trentham, and thence south-eastward by the town of Stone. Receiving near the centre of the county the waters of the Penk and the Sow, it gradually assumes an easterly direction, and as it approaches Derbyshire forms several islands. Joined by the Tame from the south it becomes the boundary between this county and that of Derby, which it continues to be, winding in a north-easterly direction till it reaches the town of Burton, where it becomes navigable, and a little below which, being joined by the Dove, it enters Derbyshire after a course through this county and bordering upon it for upwards of fifty miles. In its progress through this county it is a bold, rapid, and clear stream, bordered by luxuriant meadows or flowery banks, adorned with elegant mansions and richly ornamented pleasure grounds. The Dove forms throughout its whole course the boundary between this county and that of Derby. Rising in the moorland hills to the north-west of Longnor, near the point where the three counties of Stafford, Derby, and Chester meet, it immediately enters the beautiful and often celebrated Dove-Dale, flowing through it in a southerly direction, till it reaches Ashbourn in Derbyshire, whence it flows south towards Uttoxeter, near which town it assumes a south-easterly direction by Tutbury, till it falls into the Trent to the north-east of Burton. From the great inclination of its bed, the Dove flows with singular rapidity in some places, dashing over rugged masses of rock, and in others forming beautiful cascades. Near the village of Ilam it receives a large augmentation by the waters of the rivers Manifold and Hamps. The former rises near the source of the Dove, takes a circuitous route through a romantic vale in the north-eastern part of the county. Between the villages of Butterton and Wetton, to the south of Ecton-hill, it sinks into the earth and emerges again at Ilam, a distance of four miles from the place where it disappears. During its subterraneous course the Manifold is augmented by the Hamps, which has also a subterraneous course for a considerable length. Shortly after emerging into day, their united streams fall into the Dove. The Churnet, a powerful stream formed by the junction of two moorland rivulets near Leek, pours its waters into the Dove a little below Rochester. The Tame, formed from numerous sources in the vicinity of Walsall, flows south-easterly and enters Warwickshire near Aston. After making a considerable sweep through the northern part of that county, it re-enters Staffordshire at Tamworth, having previously, for a short distance, formed the boundary line between the two counties. From Tamworth it flows in an irregular but northerly direction till it falls into the Trent, as that river is about to enter Derbyshire. The Blythe has its source near Watley-moor, in the northern part of the county, runs nearly parallel with the Trent, into which it falls near King's-Bromley. The Penk rises near the western borders of the county, flows northward by the town of Penkridge, below which it falls into the Sow, both shortly after falling into the Trent. The Dane has its source not far from that of the Dove, and taking a westerly direction enters Chichester, having formed for upwards of ten miles the boundary between the two counties. Several streams from the south-west part of the county flow towards the Severn. Of these the principal is the Stour, which enters this county from Shropshire. Lakes in Staffordshire are neither numerous nor extensive. The principal is Aqualate-meer, on the borders of Shropshire, which is 1848 yards long, and 672 broad. Ludford-Pool is supposed to contain about 60 acres.

Climate.—The climate generally is cold and wet. The quantity of rain that falls in the moorland and mountainous district is very great. Snow also falls to a great depth, and continues long upon the ground, and having no fences but uncemented stone walls, the piercing coldness of the atmosphere is at all times felt with unmitigated rigour.

Soil.—The arable soils have been considered under: first, strong clay of two kinds, one harsh, stiff, and untractable, and one mild and friable, both commonly resting on a substratum of marl with hard rock underneath. Lands of this nature occupy a very extensive tract, stretching across the middle of the county from the borders of Derbyshire to that of Shropshire. From this, however, must be excepted the extensive waste of Cannock-heath, and the country lying east of Stafford between that town and the Trent. The same kind of soil predominates in that part of the county lying to the east of the Tame, and in a few parishes in the south-west of the county. A second kind of soil is loose light sand, admirably adapted to the growth of turnips, and occupying a tract bounded on the north by the Trent, on the east by the Tame, on the south by the limits of the county, and on the west by a supposed line extending from the village of Armistage near the Trent, southward by Longdon, Aldridge, &c., to the verge of the county near Birmingham. Of the same quality is a considerable tract lying to the south-west of Dudley and Wolverhampton, extending from the border of Worcestershire to that of Shropshire. A small patch of a similar soil extends west from Brewood, and includes the village of Sheriff-Hales. A third soil is the calcareous, resting on a substratum of limestone. This comprehends the great northern district with a few exceptions, a small tract to the north and north-west of Dudley, and of another to the north-east of Walsall. The fourth and last is a mixture of all the preceding in various proportions, with frequently the addition of gravel and other adventitious matter, and comprehending the remaining portions of the county. The substrata are various, including sand, gravel, clay, marl, and stone of different qualities. In the uncultivated tracts thin black peaty earth is met with resting upon gravel. The meadow soils are most commonly the same as the adjoining fields. Sometimes they show alluvial deposits, sometimes they are composed of peat earth to the depth of several feet and containing trunks of large trees. This kind of soil requires to be drained in order to convert it into meadow, during the process of which it sinks several inches and forms meadow land of the most valuable kind.

The extent of land in the county, subjected to some degree of cultivation, is estimated at 600,000 acres, of which 100,000 is supposed to be pasture, the remaining 500,000 in a state of tillage. Two hundred thousand acres are supposed to be of the clayey or of the more friable of the mixed loams, an equal quantity to be of the sandy or calcareous kind, and the remainder to be light sandy or gravelly loams. The course of cropping is by no means uniform, though the Norfolk system is commonly followed upon the light soils. This system includes in rotation turnips, barley, clover, and wheat. The crops generally cultivated are wheat, barley, oats, beans, and pease. Wheat averages 25 bushels per acre, barley 30, and oats from 30 to 35. Pease and beans are exceedingly precarious, sometimes yielding an abundant return, at other times nothing but fodder. Rye is seldom sown except in some places as spring food for sheep. In the moorlands, oats alone are sown, and generally for three years in succession, after which the land is laid down for a certain time in grass. Oatmeal here, notwithstanding the scornful sneering of weak Englishmen, is as much the food of man as it is in Scotland. Buck wheat, here called French wheat, is cultivated sometimes as a crop, sometimes to be ploughed down as manure. Hemp and flax are grown, but upon a small scale; tenants being, by their leases, in many cases restricted from cultivating them. Cabbages are extensively cultivated in many places of the county, with turnips, both Swedish and common, as also rape and tares. The artificial grasses are red clover, white clover, trefoil, and rye grass.

Burnet and rib-grass are sown extensively, with mixtures of the various hay-seeds. The lowlands on the banks of the rivers and brooks, are for the most part meadow or pasture, and by the overflowing of water have generally acquired a stratum of peat earth upon the surface. Considerable tracts of flat land have acquired the same property. The meadows lying upon the larger streams, by the occasional overflowing of their waters, are rendered highly productive. The produce, however, is frequently swept away by the early floods. The meadows on the banks of the Dove, and they are in some places nearly a mile wide, are from the calcareous particles left by the stream when it overflows all its banks, rendered proverbially fertile. Grass lands are very extensive in the neighbourhood of all the large towns. Lime and marl, which is found under the loamy and gravelly soils, appear to be the principal manures.

Animals.—More cattle are bred in this county than it can feed, the surplus being disposed of to the dealers from the different neighbouring counties. They are of the long horned breed, and the dairies to which they are appropriated—for few or no oxen are kept—vary from 10 to 40, sometimes to 70 cows each. Of sheep, Staffordshire has four distinct native breeds. The first, grey faced and without horns, is native on Cannock-beath and the neighbouring commons. The second, black faced, horned, and with fine wool, is peculiar to the commons on the western side of the county, towards Drayton in Shropshire. The third is the white faced with long combing wool, peculiar to the eastern parts of the moorlands. The fourth is found upon the uncultivated inclosures and wastes of the western parts of the moorlands, and is much inferior to the last mentioned. The commons in the southernmost parts of the county are stocked with a mixed breed, with wool of a good clothing quality. The pasture flocks are of various sorts, and of crosses of various sorts, such as the Cotswold, the Wiltshire, and Dorsetshire, but chiefly the Old and New Leicester breeds. Hogs are fattened upon every farm, the breed being a cross between the large slouch-eared kind and dwarf breed, which is finer boned, broad, and plump. Innumerable rabbits are reared upon the sandy parts of the waste lands.

Productions.—Gardening—we ought to have remarked before leaving the cultivated products of the soil—forms no part of, or at least a very small part of, the general economy of Staffordshire. Neither do its orchards claim any particular notice. The parish of Tettenhall alone is celebrated for the great quantities it produces of a peculiar kind of pear, called from the place where it grows, the Tettenhall pear. The county of course opens a ready market for, and takes off the superabundance of its neighbouring county, Worcester. The county, however, though not favourable to the growth of fruit, affords fair specimens of every species of forest trees common to the island. Not alone around the seats of the nobility and gentry are these to be met with, but even on parts of the steep moorland hills, particularly those of Dilthorne, Kingsby, and Oakmoor. About the commencement of the present century, before the passing of the act for its inclosure, Needwood-Forest, situated between the rivers Trent and Dove, was one wild tract of nearly 10,000 acres, affording scenery of the most romantic and beautiful kind, as well as pasture to numerous herds of deer. Of the remaining wastes Cannock-heath is the most extensive. It lies in the centre of the county and contains upwards of 25,000 acres. Of this wide waste the eastern and southern parts are cold, wet, and gravelly; but there is a tract on the west side which is accounted good sheep pasture. Much of the south and eastern parts are entirely barren, producing little besides heath, whortle-berries, lichens, and mosses. Not a tree is now to be seen here though it is said to have been at a former period covered with majestic oaks, and to have been a favourite chace of the Saxon Mercian monarchs. There are numerous other wastes of less extent, such as Walsall-wood, Whittington-heath, Weeford-Flats, Morrage, Wetley-moor, Stanton-moor, Hollington-heath, Caversal-common, &c., used only as sheep walks, though the greater part of them bear the marks of having been in former times cultivated. Peat is dug extensively on Morrage and Axedge commons, though there is no want of coal in the county.

Minerals.—The mineral productions of Staffordshire are numerous and valuable. They consist of coal, iron, lead, copper, marble, alabaster, with stones of various kinds and qualities. In the south of the county the coal district extends from Cannock-heath, a part of which it includes, to near Stour-bridge in Worcestershire, and from Wolverhampton to Walsall. This mineral is also raised in abundance in the north of the county, in the neighbourhood of the potteries near Lane-end, and Hollybush, and in the vicinity of Cheadle and Dilthorne. In the southern district, the seam of coal, or stratum, is frequently 8, 10, and sometimes 12 yards in thickness. The dip is towards the west, seemingly occasioned by a mass of red sandstone, occupying a tract of 12 miles in breadth between this and the Shropshire coal formation. The colliery of Birch-hill, near Walsall, yields what is called blind coal, being deprived of its bitumen by a bed of trap, or green stone, lying over it. At Hanley is raised a singular kind of coal, called from the prismatic colours it exhibits, Peacock coal. In the district of the potteries, the strata intervening between the different beds of coal consist chiefly of clays, some of which make admirable fire bricks, which are largely used for building kilns, and forming the sagars, or cases, in which the stoneware is burned. Iron ore is found in all the coal mines. In the neighbourhood of Wednesbury, Tipton, Bilston, Sedgley, and to the west of Newcastle, the ironstone strata are extensive, lying generally under coal. It is also plentiful on Cannock-heath, but of little value. The number of men employed in coal and iron mines, and at the foundries, blast-furnaces, slitting-mills, &c., connected with these mines, is immense. Copper and lead ores are raised at Ecton, near Warlaw, copper alone at Mixon, and lead on Stanton-moor, in the same division of the county. Limestone forms the substratum of a great part of the county, and immense quantities of it are raised for burning into lime, particularly on Caldron-Low, and in the neighbourhood of the Weaver-hills. In several places of the county the limestone has many of the qualities of marble, and takes a fine polish; in others, it seems to be composed entirely of petrified marine substances. Rance-marble, white with red veins, and taking a polish which fits it for being used as chimney-pieces, is found in great abundance in Yelperley Tor, and the adjoining hills. Grey marble is found at Stansop, and a very hard black marble in Powke-hill. Veins of alabaster are found on the banks of the Dove, and between Needwood-Forest and Tutbury. Many of the moulds used in the potteries are composed of this material, after it has been ground into fine powder, and formed into a paste. Extensive quarries of freestone are found in many parts of the county; that obtained at Bilston is peculiarly fine. A very peculiar kind of stone forms the basis of the hills of Rowley. It is devoid of any gritty quality, and is carried to Birmingham and other towns, where it is used for paving. This stone, called Rowley-ragstone, is found in no regular strata, but in rude heaps and masses, sometimes projecting above the surface. Clays of almost all descriptions are found in the county, and form a principal source of its wealth. Potter's clay is found in the greatest abundance in the neighbourhood of Newcastle-under-Lyne. At Amblecot, in the south part of the county, is a bluish clay which makes glass-house pots of a very superior quality, and vast quantities of it are used for that purpose. Ochres, yellow and red, are found in the county. At Darlston is obtained a blue clay much used by glovers. Black chalk is found in Langley-Close, and red earth, little inferior to the red chalk of France, near Himley-hall.

Manufactures.—The manufactures of Staffordshire are various and extensive. Hardware, especially in the southern districts, forms a most important article, and affords employment to many thousand persons. Edge-tools, augers, files, japanned goods, &c., give scope to the industry of Wolverhampton and its vicinity. Walsall is famous for bridle-bits, stirrup-irons, and spurs. The making of nails employs the many thousands of the populous parishes of Sedgley, Rowley, West-Bromwich, Smethwick, Tipton, Wombourne, and Pelsall. Even the women and children of these parishes find employment in making the very light and fine kinds, at which they are even more handy than the men. Other kinds of hardware are also produced in different places, such as plated, lackered, japanned, and enamelled goods, toys, tobacco and snuff-boxes of iron and polished steel. Steam-engines are also among the articles produced here, and fowling-pieces of good quality. Brass is made, and tin-plates prepared, in the northern part of the county. Glass-houses are to be met with in the neigh-lourhood of Stourbridge and Dudley, on the borders of Worcestershire, where the manufacture of glass is extensively prosecuted. The manufacture of china and earthenware is the most extensive and important in the kingdom. It has given name to a district (the Potteries) of about 10 square miles, which is covered with villages, and contains upwards of 20,000 inhabitants. The making of earthenware has long been practised here, but it was not till the latter end of last century that it was raised to such a superlative degree of excellence. The several species of ware invented by the late ingenious Josiah Wedgewood, varied by the industry and ingenuity of the workmen into an almost infinity of forms, variously painted and embellished, may be said to constitute nearly the whole of the fine earthenwares manufactured in England, forming the material of a very extensive and lucrative traffic. Of these wares the following are the principal:—Queen's-ware, composed of white clays from Derby and Dorsetshires, mixed with ground flint.—Terra cotta, resembling porphyry, granite, and other stones of the silicious and crystalline order.—Basaltes, or black ware.—Porcelain biscuit, possessing properties nearly the same as the natural stone of that name.—Jasper, a white porcelain biscuit of exquisite delicacy, possessing the general properties of the basaltes, with the singular one of receiving through its whole substance, from the mixture of metallic calces, the same colours which these calces communicate to glass or enamels in fusion, a property which no other porcelain or earthenware has been found to possess.—Bamboo, or cane-coloured porcelain biscuit, possessing nearly the same qualities as the white.—Lastly, a porcelain of a hardness little inferior to agate. The glazes are of vitreous composition. The raw materials for this manufacture are brought from the most distant parts of the kingdom, and many individuals make an honest livelihood in collecting them. After being collected on the most distant shores of the island, they are brought to the nearest ports, conveyed by the Newfoundland fishing vessels, during the season they are unemployed in fishing. By the different inland navigations they are forwarded in small craft to the potteries. From these potteries nearly the whole kingdom of Great Britain is supplied with earthenware, yet the far greater proportion made there is sent to foreign countries. The United States, alone, take off 60,000 packages annually. Almost no wool is manufactured here, the produce of the county being sold to the hosiery and clothing districts in the neighbouring counties. Cotton is manufactured on a large scale at Rochester, on the Dove, at Fazeley, and at Tutbury. Silk and mohair are manufactured at Leek, the articles being sewing-silk, twist, buttons, ribbands, ferrets, shawls, and handkerchiefs. Tape is manufactured at Cheadle and Tean, boots and shoes at Stafford, and ale of the first quality is made in this county at Burton-upon-Trent.

Canals.—The facilities for commerce and trade in this county are incalculably augmented by the numerous canals by which it is intersected in every direction. The Grand Trunk canal enters it from Cheshire, near Lawton, on the north-east, and, passing through the very heart of the county, enters Derbyshire a little to the north of Burton-on-the-East. The Stafford and Worcestershire canal branches off from the Grand Trunk at Haywood, near the confluence of the Sow and Trent, proceeding up the valley of the former for several miles in a westerly direction, and afterwards turning southward, it proceeds to the extremity of the county in its progress to the Severn. By this canal the communication is completed between the ports of Bristol, Liverpool, and Hull. The Coventry and Oxford canal branches from the Grand Trunk at Fradley-heath, whence, by a circuitous and southerly course, it proceeds into Warwickshire. From this a branch proceeds from Fazeley to Birmingham, called the Birmingham and Fazeley canal. The Wyrley and Essington canal, commencing at a place called Wyrley-bank, passes through Oldfield, over Essington-wood and Snead-commons, &c., till it forms a junction with the Birmingham canal near Wolverhampton. The branches of this canal are three,—one from the vicinity of Wolverhampton to Stow-heath,—one from Pool-Hayes to Ashmore-Park,—and a third from Lapley-Hayes to Ashmore-Park. The Wyrley and Essington extension is a branch from the Coventry canal, commencing at Huddlesford, and proceeding to the south of Lichfield, over part of Cannock-heath, till it joins the Wyrley and Essington canal near Bloxwich; a branch is also carried southward by Walsall-wood to the lime-works at Hayhead. The Birmingham canal, from that town in Warwickshire, is carried by a north-westerly course to Wolverhampton, and thence to the Staffordshire and Worcestershire canal, a little to the north of that town, after a course of 22 miles. Of this canal the branches are far too numerous to be here particularized. The reader is referred to the accompanying map, where one glance of the eye will give him a better idea of these various ramifications, than pages of description could possibly do.

History.—Of this county the ancient British inhabitants were the Cornavii, and, by the Romans, it was included in the division called Flavia Cesariensis. Under the Anglo-Saxon octarchy it formed part of the kingdom of Mercia. In the calamitous results of the Danish invasions, this portion of the country seems to have had its full share. Dreadful ravages were committed in this county during the reign of Henry I., by Robert, earl of Shrewsbury, who supported by open revolt the claims of Robert, duke of Normandy. In the rebellion against Edward II., Thomas, earl of Lancaster, was defeated in a severe battle at Burton-upon-Trent. During the sanguinary struggle between the houses of York and Lancaster, a severe engagement took place at Blore-heath, in this county, between the earl of Salisbury, who was proceeding to join the duke of York, and Lord Audley, who commanded the royal army. The latter was defeated, with the loss of his own life and the lives of 2400 of his followers.

In the contest between Charles I. and his parliament, both parties had numerous partizans in this county, and many sanguinary conflicts ensued. In 1643, an action took place on Hop-ton-heath, near Stafford, between the royalists, under the earl of Northampton, and the parliamentarians, under Sir John Gell and Sir William Brereton, in which, though the royalists had at first the advantage, the earl of Northumberland was, in the attempt to pursue, surrounded and slain. Stafford soon after surrendered to the parliament, as did Wolverhampton and the castle of Eccleshall. The latter stood, however, a siege, and the royalists attempting to relieve it, were signally defeated by Sir William Brereton. Tutbury, after a vigorous siege, was also reduced by Sir William Brereton. Burton-upon-Trent was plundered by the parliamentarians, who left a garrison in it. Lichfield-Close was the same year, 1643, reduced by Sir John Gell for the parliament, but the garrison left in it was in a short time compelled to deliver it up by Prince Rupert, who also reduced Burton. In 1644, Dudley-castle was besieged by the parliamentarians, but relieved by a party of the king's forces. Sturton-castle also, this year, surrendered to the king, whose friends also successfully defended Lord Paget's manor-house near Burton-upon-Trent. In the course of the year 1646, the whole county was reduced by the parliamentarians. In 1745, Charles Stuart, in his retreat from Derby, halted at Leek, in this county, while the duke of Cumberland was at Stone. The former, however, resumed his retreat before the latter could come up with him, and since that era the smile of peace has continued to cheer, without interruption, the toils of honest industry.

Divisions.—With the exception of two parishes, Brome and Clent, Staffordshire lies in the dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, province of Canterbury. It forms an archdeaconry, containing eight deaneries, and comprises 146 parishes, of which 45 are rectories, and 44 vicarages, the remainder being curacies. For civil purposes it is divided into five hundreds, each of which has two divisions, one city, Lichfield, the borough and market-towns of Newcastle-under-Lyne, Stafford, Tamworth, Wolverhampton, and Stoke-upon-Trent. Four knights of the shire are returned for the county, two for the northern, and two for the southern divisions. The county is included in the Oxford circuit, Stafford being the seat of the quarter sessions.

The county is not remarkable for monuments of antiquity. Some stones, supposed to be druidical, some ancient camps, Roman remains, cathedrals, church fonts, &c. &c., will be found described under the several parishes wherein they lie. Pop., in 1801, 239,265; in '931, 410,400. A. P., £1,150,285.

STAFFORD (WEST), a parish in the hundred of Collingford-Tree, Dorchester division, co. of Dorset. Living, a rectory with that of Frome-Billet, in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, rated at £10 8s. 1½d. Patroness, in 1829, Mrs Floyer. Distance from Dorchester, 2½ m. E.S.E. Pop., in 1801, 144; in 1831, 184. A. P., £2,199.

STAGBACH, a hamlet in the parish of Leominster, 2 m. W.S.W. from Leominster. Pop. with the township of Livingston.

STAGENHOE, a hamlet in the parish of St Paul's, Walden, 3½ m. W. from Stevenage. Pop. with the parish.

STAGSDEN, a parish in the hundred of Willey, co. of Bedford. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Bedford and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £8. Church ded. to St Leonard. Patron, Lord Hampden. Distance from Bedford, 5 m. W.S.W. Pop., in 1801, 492; in 1831, 597. A. P., £3,376.

STAGSHAW-BANK, a hamlet in the parish of Corbridge, co. of Northumberland, 4½ m. E.N.E. from Hexham.

STAINBOROUGH, a chapelry in the parish of Silkstone, W. R., co. of York. Living, a curacy to the vicarage of Silkstone, in the archd. and dio. of York, not in charge. Patron, the vicar of Silkstone. Here, in an extensive park, with various picturesque views, stands Stainborough-hall, or Wentworth-castle, built by Thomas Wentworth, earl of Stafford, about the year 1630. It is a large quadrangular building, the most remarkable part of which is its stately portico, and it contains a collection of fine paintings and statues. Here is also a school, endowed with £10 per annum, which educates from 15 to 20 children. Distance from Barnesley, 3¼ m. S.W. Pop., in 1801, 227; in 1831, 304. A. P., £2,704.

STAINBURN, a township in the parish of Workington, co. of Cumberland. Here in the olden time was an oratory, subordinate to the monastery of St Bees. Distance from Workington, 1 m. E. Pop., in 1801, 137; in 1831, 174. A. P. with the parish.

STAINBURN, a chapelry in the parish of Kirkby-Overblows, W. R., co. of York. Living, a curacy to the rectory of Kirkby-Overblows, in the archd. and dio. of York, certified at £18, returned at £40. Patron, the rector of Kirkby-Overblows. Distance from Otley, 5 m. N.E. Pop., in 1801, 311; in 1831, 290. A. P., £2,026.

STAINBY, a parish in the wapentake of Beltisloe, parts of Kesteven, co. of Lincoln. Living, a rectory with that of Gunby, in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £6 6s. 8d. Church ded. to St Peter. Patron, in 1829, the earl of Harborough. Distance from Colsterworth, 2½ m. W.S.W. Pop., in 1801, 108; in 1831, 186. A. P., £1,763.

STAINCLIFFE AND EWCROSS, a wapentake in the W. R. of the co. of York. It lies in the north-west of the county bordering on Lancashire, comprises 30 parishes, including 3 market-towns, 79 townships, and 9 chapelries. Pop., in 1831, 70,319.

STAINCROSS, a wapentake in the W. R. of the co. of York. It lies in the west side of the county bordering on Cheshire, and comprises 10 parishes, including 2 market-towns, 32 townships, and 6 chapelries. Pop., in 1831, 38,684.

STAINDROP, a parish and township in the south-west division of Darlington ward, co-palatine of Durham. Living, a curacy in the archd. and dio. of Durham, certified at £4 5s., returned at £98. The church—formerly collegiate and containing many monuments—is ded. to St Mary. Patron, in 1829, the marquess of Cleveland. The town of Staindrop, which is very ancient, consists principally of one wide and well-built street. A weekly market on Saturday, which had gone into desuetude, has been revived, and is well supplied. The annual fair on the vigil of St Thomas and two following days, has also been revived. Here is a good subscription library and news-room. Extensive works for smelting lead ore are carried on in Langley-Dale. Petty-sessions are held by the magistrates every alternate Saturday, and courts leet and baron for the lordship of Raby, are held at Michaelmas by the lord of the manor. At the former, constables are sworn in. At the latter, debts of 40s. are recoverable. Raby-castle, which was the residence of King Canute, is considered to be one of the most perfect remains of the style of building in feudal times, to be found in the kingdom. Here was a collegiate establishment, founded in the reign of Henry IV., by Ralph Nevill, earl of Westmoreland, in honour of the Virgin Mary, for a master, six priests, six clerks, six decayed gentlemen, &c. At the dissolution its revenues were estimated at £170 4s. 6d. per annum. The Society of Friends, the Independents, the Wesleyan Methodists, and the Presbyterians, have each a place of worship here, and there is a school with an endowment of £15 per annum, which educates about 30 children. Distance from Barnard-castle, 5 m. E. Pop., in 1801, of the township, 1156, of the entire parish, 1772; in 1831, of the former, 1478, of the latter, 2395. A. P., of the township, £2,701, of the entire parish, £10,167.

STAINES, a market-town and parish in the hundred of Spelthorne, co. of Middlesex. Living, a vicarage with the curacies of Ashford and Loleham, in the archd. of Middlesex and dio. of London, rated at £12 3s. 4d. The church—which stands a short distance from the town—is ded. to St Mary. Patron, the lord-chancellor. The town of Staines is situated on the east bank of the Thames, over which it had an iron bridge, now re-placed by a substantial stone one. A fine new street has been formed in a line with this bridge, by which the access to the town has been greatly improved. Its name is supposed to be derived from the Saxon word Stana, a stone, in allusion to the mark stone which stands a little above the bridge at Coln-ditch. This stone bears date, 1280, and it marks the boundary of the jurisdiction of the city of London, over the river to the west. The town is chiefly composed of houses on each side of the highway, which forms the principal street. It has been greatly improved of late years. The market is on Friday, and there are fairs, May 11th and September 19th. Duncroft-house—where King John slept the night after signing Magna Charta, at Runymede—is in this parish. A forest in ancient times extended from this place to Hounslow, but has been partly inclosed. Staines is a lordship of the crown, and is governed by two constables, and four head boroughs, chosen annually by the king's stewards. Besides the established church there are here places of worship for the Society of Friends, the Baptists, and the Independents, a national and a Lancasterian school for boys, and a national school and a school of industry for girls. Distance from London, 17 m. W. S.W. Pop., in 1801, 1750; in 1831, 2486. A. P., £10,188.

STAINFIELD, a hamlet in the parish of Haconby, co. of Lincoln, $\frac{3}{4}$ m. N.N.W. from Bourne. Pop. with the parish.

STAINFIELD, a parish in the west division of the wapentake of Wraggoc, parts of Lindsey, co. of Lincoln. Living, a curacy with that of Appleby, in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln, certified at £6. Patron, the vicar of Haconby. "Henry Percy, in the latter end of the reign of King Henry II., built and endowed here a priory for nuns of the Benedictine order, which, at the suppression, had belonging to it 16 religious. Their possessions were then valued at £98 8s. per ann. Dugd., £112 5s. Speed., £120 Leland."—Tanner's Not. Mon. Distance from Wragby, 4 m. S.S.W. Pop., in 1801, 74; in 1831, 136. A. P., £2,745.

STAINFORTH, a township in the parish of Hatfield, W. R., co. of York. The Wesleyan Methodists and the Unitarians have here places of worship, and there is a small bequest for the educating of poor children. Distance from Thorne, 4 m. W.S.W. Pop., in 1801, 472; in 1831, 852. A. P., £3,969.

STAINFORTH, a township in the parish of Giggleswick, W. R., co. of York. Here is a very fine waterfall on the Ribbles, known by the name of Stainforth-Force. Distance from Settle, 2 m. N. Pop., in 1801, 203; in 1831, 263. A. P., £3,787.

STAININGHALL. See HORSTEAD.

STAININGTON, a chapelry newly erected in the parish of Ecclesfield, W. R., co. of York. The chapel—built under the authority of the commissioners appointed by parliament for the erection—was finished in November, 1829, at an expense of £2,607 19s. 3d. It contains upwards of 700 sittings, more than one-half being free. Pop. with the parish.

STAINLAND, a township in the parish of Halifax, W. R., co. of York. Here are extensive manufactures of woollen cloth, cotton, and paper. Several ancient fortifications are to be met with in this neighbourhood, and Roman coins have at different times been discovered. The Independents have here a place of worship, and there is another chapel, in which the service is performed according to the ritual of the church of England. Distance from Halifax, $\frac{1}{4}$ m. S.S.W. Pop., in 1801, 1800; in 1831, 3037. A. P., £3,155.

STANLEY (NORTH) WITH LENINGFORD, a township in the parish of Ripon, W. R., co. of York, 5 m. N.N.W. from Ripon. Pop., in 1801, 315; in 1831, 407. A. P., £4,146.

STANLEY (SOUTH), a parish in the lower division of the wapentake of Claro, W. R., co. of York. Living, a curacy in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester, certified at £1, returned at £61. Patrons, in 1829, Horner Reynard, Esq., and the heirs of the late Mrs Gibson. Distance from Ripley, 3 m. N.N.E. Pop., in 1801, 217; in 1831, 243. A. P., £2,316.

STAINMORE, a chapelry in the parish of Brough, co. of Westmoreland. Living, a curacy to the vicarage of Brough, in the archd. and dio. of Carlisle, certified at £80. Patron, in 1829, the earl of Thanet. Here are extensive collieries, freestone quarries, and a lead mine. Stainmore Forest is partly in the parish of Brough, partly in that of Kirkby-Stephen, and partly in the parish of Bowes, Yorkshire. There is a school house adjoining to the chapel with an endowment of £8 per annum. Distance from Brough, 4 m. E.S.E. Pop., in 1801, 530; in 1831, 707. A. P., £4,923.

STAINS-ACRE, a hamlet in the parish of Whitby, N. R., co. of York, 2½ m. S.S.E. from Whitby. Pop. with the parish.

STAINSBY, a township in the parish of Ault-Hucknall, co. of Derby, 5½ m. S.E. from Chesterfield. Pop. with the parish.

STANTON, a township in the parish of Stanwix, co. of Cumberland, 1½ m. N.W. from Carlisle. Pop., in 1801, 63; in 1831, 67. A. P. with the parish.

STANTON, a township in the parish of Dacre, co. of Cumberland, 3 m. S.W. from Penrith. Here is a small bequest upon which eight poor children are educated. Pop. with the parish.

STANTON, a township in the parish of Urswick, co.-palatine of Lancaster, 1½ m. S.E. from Dalton. Pop. with the parish.

STANTON (GREAT), a parish in the north-east division of Stockton ward, co.-palatine of Durham. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Durham, rated at £12 13s. 4d. Church ded. to All Saints. Patron, the lord-chancellor. Here is a well endowed school. Distance from Darlington, 7 m. N.N.E. Pop., in 1801, 141; in 1831, 248. A. P., £3,164.

STANTON by LANGWORTH, in the west division of the wapentake of Wraggoc, parts of Lindsey, co. of Lincoln. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £4 18s. 4d. Church ded. to St John the Baptist. Patron, in 1829, the earl of Scarborough. Distance from Wragby, 5 m. W. Pop., in 1801, 166; in 1831, 238. A. P., £3,434.

STANTON, or STEYNTON, a parish in the hundred of Rhôs, co. of Pembroke, South Wales. Living, a discharged vicarage in the dio. of St David's, rated at £9 17s. 3½d. Patron, the king. This parish—the area of which comprises about 6000 acres—lies adjacent to Milford-haven on the south, and to Haverford-West on the north. Sir William Jones, the son of a miller, who, without any patronage further than that which was gained by his genius and perseverance, rose to the rank of a commodore in the navy. Elder Butler, of Trinity-house, governor of Greenwich-hospital, Fellow of the Royal Society, and member of parliament for West Looe, received his education at a school in this parish. Distance from Milford, 1½ m. N.E. Pop., in 1801, 1291; in 1831, 2984. A. P., £6,263.

STANTON, a chapelry in the parish of Haversham, co. of Westmoreland. Living, a curacy in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester, endowed with £800 royal bounty, and £400 private benefaction. Patron, the vicar of Haversham. On the Beck, a small stream which falls into the Belo, are two flax mills, a woollen mill, a corn mill, and a mill for turning bobbins. The chapel, called Cross-Crake chapel, founded in the reign of Richard II., was rebuilt in 1773. Cross-Crake school, adjoining to the chapel, has been lately rebuilt by subscription. It has an endowment of £5, and is attended by about 70 children, who pay each a small quarterage. Distance from Kendal, 4 m. S.E. Pop., in 1801, 385; in 1831, 388. A. P., £2,860.

STANTON, a township in the parish of Downholme, N. R., co. of York, 5½ m. W.S.W. from Richmond. Pop., in 1811, 91; in 1831, 44. A. P. not returned separately.

STANTON, a parish and township in the west division of the liberty of Langbaugh, N. R., co. of York. Living, a vicarage with the curacy of Thornaby, annexed in the archd. of Cleveland and dio. of York, rated at £5 14s. 2d., returned at £80. Church ded. to St Peter. Patron, the archbishop of York. Here is a school with a small endowment. Distance from Stokesley, 3 m. N.N.W. Pop., in 1801, of the township, 272, of the entire parish, 798; in 1831, of the former, 271, of the latter, 1000. A. P., of the township, £3,110, of the entire parish, £11,189.

STANTON, a parish in the upper division of the wapentake of Strafforth and Tickhill, W. R., co. of York. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of York, rated at £5 15s. Church ded. to St Winifred. Patron, in 1829, the earl of Scarborough. Distance from Doncaster, 7 m. S.S.W. Pop., in 1801, 151; in 1831, 254. A. P., £2,423.

Church ded. to St Andrew. Patron, in 1829, J. Angerstein, Esq. Distance from Market-Raisen, 6 m. N.E. Pop., in 1801, 108; in 1831, 118. A. P., £1,750.

STANTON-MARKET, a town and parish in the north division of the wapentake of Gartree, parts of Lindsey, co. of Lincoln. Living, a curacy in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln, certified at £6, returned at £50 7s. 10d. Church ded. to St Michael. Patron, in 1829, Mr Dickenson. Monday was the market-day, but the market has gone into desuetude; and a fair that used to be held here, October 29th, has been transferred to Horncastle, and is called Horncastle-Stainton fair. Distance from Wragby, 7 m. E.N.E. Pop., in 1801, 93; in 1831, 132. A. P., £1,185.

STAINTON-DALE, a township in the parish of Scalby, N. R., co. of York, $8\frac{1}{2}$ m. N. N.W. from Scarborough. Pop., in 1801, 271; in 1831, 252. A. P., £984.

STAITHES, a hamlet, partly in the parish of Easington, and partly in that of Hinderwell, N. R. co. of York. It lies upon the sea coast and is surrounded on all sides, except a small opening to the sea, by hills and cliffs of immense height. It is inhabited solely by fishermen. It is 10 m. N.W. from Whitby. Pop. with the parish of Hinderwell.

STALBRIDGE, a market-town and parish in the hundred of Brownhull, Sherborne division of the co. of Dorset. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, rated at £27 4s. 7d. Church ded. to St Mary. Patrons, the master and fellows of Corpus-Christi college, Cambridge. Stalbridge is situated near the Stour, upon a rock, out of which the town has been built, and which furnishes building materials for the neighbourhood. The streets are but indifferently paved, and only partially lighted; but there is an abundant supply of excellent water. Near the centre of the town is a cross standing on three octagonal flights of steps. It is ornamented with sculptured representations of the crucifixion, a figure of the Saviour with a lamb at his feet, with shrines, shield arms, &c., and reaches to the height of 30 feet. The parish is intersected by the Stour, and by the Dorsetshire and Somersetshire canal, from which its facilities of communication must be greatly improved; yet the stocking manufacture, which was prosecuted here with considerable success, has declined. This has been succeeded by the winding of silk, though not to a great extent. The Methodists have here a place of worship, and a national school for both sexes is supported by subscription. The market-day is Tuesday, and fairs are held May 6th and September 4th, for cattle. Distance from Sherborne, $7\frac{1}{2}$ m. E.N.E.; from London, 112 m. W.S.W. Pop., in 1801, 1245; in 1831, 1773. A. P., £10,615.

STALEY-BRIDGE, a market-town and chapelry, partly in the parish of Ashton-under-Line, co.-palatine of Lancaster, partly in the parish of Stockport, and partly in the parish of Mottram, co.-palatine of Chester. Living, a curacy to the rectory of Ashton-under-Line, in the archd. and dio. of Chester, endowed with £800 royal bounty, and £1,600 parliamentary grant. The chapel—a handsome building, occupying an elevated site—is ded. to St George. Patron, the earl of Stamford. Staley-bridge is situated on the Tame, and derives its name from the family of the Staneleighs who formerly resided here, and from the bridge across the Tame, which connects the two counties-palatine, Lancaster and Chester. The streets are partially paved, lighted with gas, and the supply of water is abundant. Since the year 1776, when the first cotton-mill was erected here, the advance of the trade and population of the town have been singularly rapid. A steam-engine was introduced into the first built mill here in 1795. In 1828 there were 24 factories, worked by 83 steam-engines, and by six water-wheels, having the aggregate power of 898 horses, turning 393,116 spindles, and working 2900 power-loom, the tending of which, give employment to nearly 7000 persons. The number of mills since that period has been greatly increased, and in the course of the last three years, upwards of 800 dwelling-houses have been erected. The great road from Manchester to Sheffield passes on the north side of the town, and the Huddersfield canal, in the vicinity, by which the commercial facilities of the place are greatly augmented. Here are places of worship for Baptists, general and particular, and for Wesleyan Methodists, both of the old and new connexion. Sabbath schools are attached to all these congregations, which are attended by upwards of 2000 children. Notwithstanding the importance of this place, its population, amounting to upwards of 12,000, has hitherto been returned under the different parishes and townships in which it happens to be situated. It is 8 m. N.E. from Stockport.

STALHAM, a parish in the hundred of Happening, co. of Norfolk. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich, rated at £5. Church ded. to St Mary. Patron, in 1829, the marquess Cholmondeley. Here is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Distance from North-Walsham, 7 m. E.S.E. Pop., in 1801, 476; in 1831, 613. A. P., £1,864.

Patron, the marquess of Exeter.

Description.—Stamford is pleasantly situated on a gently rising hill, on the north bank of the Welland, across which, a stone-bridge of five arches connects it with Stamford-Baron, or St Martin's, in Northamptonshire. The houses are well built, generally of free stone obtained from the neighbouring quarries of Ketten and Barnock. The streets are indifferently paved and lighted by gas. Water is brought from Wothorpe by pipes, the distance being about a mile. In the principal street leading from the bridge stands the town-hall, a handsome building, erected in 1776 on the site of an old structure which had fallen into ruins. It contains apartments used for transacting the business of the corporation, holding the sessions, and a house of correction. The town has also a theatre, which is neat and commodious, and assembly-rooms. Races are run in March and July, upon an excellent course on Wittering heath, of about a mile in length, and on the banks of the river are excellent hot and cold baths. The Welland is navigable up to the town for boats and small barges, but the trade is inconsiderable. It consists principally in malt, coal, timber, and free-stone. The market days are Monday and Friday, the latter especially for corn. The butchers' and fish markets were erected by the corporation in 1807. Fairs are held on Tuesday preceding February 13th, Monday before Mid-Lent, Mid-Lent Monday, Monday before May 12th, Monday after the festival of Corpus Christi, and the 8th of November. The town was governed by aldermen in the time of William the Conqueror, but it was not incorporated till the reign of Edward IV. By charter granted in the reign of Charles II., confirmed by James II., the corporation consists of a mayor, twelve aldermen, and twenty-four capital burgesses, who appoint a recorder, coroner, town-clerk, and other subordinate officers. The mayor and aldermen are elected annually by the members of the corporation. The office of coroner is held in succession to that of mayor. The mayor and aldermen are justices of the peace, and hold quarter sessions, and a court of record for the recovery of debts to the amount of £40 if contracted within the limits of the borough. They have also the power of trying for capital offences; but this they do not exercise. The freedom is inherited, acquired by apprenticeship, by purchase, and by gift of the corporation. The custom of Borough English prevails here, by which, when the father dies intestate, the youngest son succeeds to the lands and tenements, to the exclusion of the elder branches of the family. Stamford sends two members to parliament, the elective franchise, on the new principle, is enjoyed by about 500 individuals. The mayor is the returning officer.

History.—Stamford, originally called Stam-forde, is of great antiquity; its origin being, by tradition, placed in a period antecedent to the Christian era. The earliest authentic notice of it that occurs in history, however, is that by Henry of Huntingdon, who records it as the place where the Picts and the Scots, after having ravaged the country so far, were defeated by the Britons, assisted by the Saxons under the command of Hengist. It was one of the five cities among which the Danes, after being defeated, were distributed by Alfred, whence they were called Fif-burgenses, or five Burghers. The other cities were Derby, Nottingham, and Lincoln, to which were subsequently added Chester and York, whence the appellation was changed into Sea-fenburghenses. Edward the Elder, in the early part of the tenth century, to check the incursions of the Danes, and to awe the Five Burghers, erected a castle on the bank of the river, opposite the town, of which there is not a vestige remaining. Of a castle on the north-west of the town, which was fortified by Stephen during the war with the Empress Matilda, the foundations were still visible. The town at this period seems to have been walled; but of the walls no trace can now be discovered. At Stamford, the barons, in the 17th of King John, concerted those measures which led to the signing of the famed Magna Charta. In the reign of Henry III., the Carmelites and numbers of other religious fraternities commenced giving lectures here in divinity and the liberal arts, which being attended by a number of youths of good family, led to the erection of a college, and Stamford became celebrated as a place of education. From this celebrity, when the dissensions at Oxford in the reign of Edward III. ran high between the students of the southern and the students of the northern counties, the latter, with several professors at their head, retired to Stamford, where they remained till they were recalled by royal proclamation. Statutes were soon after passed by both universities, which put an end to the college of Stamford. During the wars between the houses of York and Lancaster, a great part of the town was burnt to the ground, since which it has never attained to the same importance. Previously to this disaster, which took place in 1461, the town had 14 parish churches, a number of which were destroyed in the burning of the city; they were still farther reduced at the dissolution of the religious houses, and it was not till 1547 that an act of parliament was passed for the preservation of the five that still remain.

Benevolent Institutions, &c.—Besides the established church, there are places of worship for the Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, and Roman Catholics. A free grammar school was founded in 1500, by Alderman William Radcliffe, and endowed with estates now amounting to nearly £500 per annum. By authority of parliament, the aldermen of Stamford appoint the master, by the advice, and with the consent of the master of St John's college, Cambridge. The master has a house provided for him, receives the whole endowment, from which he pays an under teacher, and repairs the school-house. This school is entitled to one of twenty-four scholarships founded by Lord Burghley at St John's college, Cambridge, and its scholars, other things being equal, are entitled to the preference upon three fellowships and eight scholarships, founded at Clare-Hall college, Cambridge, by Thomas, Lord Exeter. The Blue-coat school, endowed by a subscription made among the inhabitants in 1704, educates about 40 boys, and a school for girls upon the national system has been established a few years ago. The charitable institutions are numerous and liberally endowed. The principal is the hospital, or head-house, founded in 1493, and largely endowed by William Browne, for a warden, confrater, 12 poor aged men, and a nurse, who are incorporated, and have a common seal. Truesdale's hospital, in Scot-street, was founded in 1700, and eight poor men with their wives are lodged in it, receiving a weekly allowance of 5s., with an allowance for coal and clothing annually. Snowden's hospital affords an asylum to eight poor women, with a weekly allowance of 2s. each. Williamson's almshouse has apartments for 10 poor women, with a weekly allowance of 6s. All Saints and Peter's Hill almshouses have each small endowments, and they share pretty largely in several charitable bequests left for the poor of the place. A lying-in charity is supported by voluntary contributions, and an infirmary, partly by legacies left for the purpose, and partly by subscriptions and donations. Here was a Benedictine priory, ded. to St Leonard, valued at the dissolution at £36 17s. per annum. It is now a farm-house belonging to the earl of Exeter, and, with the small manor adjoining, still bears the name of St Cuthbert's-Fee. Of the priory of Carmelites the west gate is still standing. It is a handsome specimen of the architecture of the period. Of the convent of Grey friars, founded by Henry III., all that remains, is a postern and part of an outer wall. Here were also priories of Augustines, Gilbertines, and Dominicans, and an hospital, or house of lepers. On St Brice's day there is still observed the custom of bull-running, which is said to have originated in the reign of King John, by William, earl of Warren, having granted a meadow for the use of the butchers of the town, on condition that they should find a bull, to be hunted and baited annually on that day, for the amusement of the inhabitants. Stamford gives the title of earl to the Greys of Groby. Distance from Lincoln, 46 m. S.E.; from London, 89 m. N.W. Pop., in 1801, 4022; in 1831, 5897. A. P., £10,699.

STANFORD-UPON-SOAR, a parish in the south division of the wapentake of Rushcliffe, co. of Nottingham. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Nottingham and dio. of York, rated at £9 7s. 6d. Church ded. to John the Baptist. Patron, in 1829, the Rev. S. F. Dashwood. This parish is intersected by the Trent. Distance from Loughborough, 2½ m. N.N.E. Pop., in 1801, 119; in 1831, 129. A. P., £2,681.

STANGOR, a hamlet in the parish of Crosthwaite, co. of Cumberland, 4 m. S.W. from Keswick. Pop. with the parish.

STANHOE WITH BARWICK, a parish in the hundred of Smithdon, co. of Norfolk. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich, rated at £16. Church ded.

to All Saints. Patrons, Mr and Mrs Hoste. Distance from Burnham-Westgate, 4 m. S.S.W. Pop., in 1801, 374; in 1831, 436. A. P., £3,651.

STANHOPE, a parish in the north-west division of Darlington ward, co.-palatine of Durham. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Durham, rated at £67 6s. 8d. Church ded. to St Thomas the apostle. Patron, the bishop of Durham. Stanhope, anciently a market-town, is pleasantly situated on the north bank of the Wear. Many of the inhabitants are employed in the lead mines, which are wrought here for a London company, upon a most extensive scale. Of these mines a tenth is claimed by the rector, which makes the living highly valuable. Petty-sessions are held here every alternate Friday, and courts-baron occasionally. Roman antiquities, altars, coins, &c., have often been found here. At the west end of the parish is the site of an ancient fortress, which in one of their predatory incursions was destroyed by the Scots. It rises 188 feet above the Wear, which washes its southern base, and it is defended on the north side by a deep ditch. The neighbourhood is bleak, rugged, and mountainous, abounding in limestone. Distance from Walsingham, 5½ m. W.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 5155; in 1831, 9541. A. P., £16,339.

STANION, a parish in the hundred of Corby, co. of Northampton. Living, a vicarage with that of Brigstock, in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough, not in charge. Church ded. to St Peter. Here is a place of worship for the Wesleyan Methodists. Distance from Rockingham, 5 m. S.E. Pop., in 1801, 248; in 1831, 313. A. P., £1,806.

STANLEY, a chapelry in the parish of Spondon, co. of Derby. Living, a curacy to the vicarage of Spondon, in the archd. of Derby and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, certified at £10, returned at £17 7s. 6d. Chapel ded. to St Andrew. Patron, the vicar of Spondon. One-fifth of West Hallam school belongs to this chapelry. Distance from Derby, 6 m. E.N.E. Pop., in 1801, 254; in 1831, 391. A. P., £1,343.

STANLEY, a hamlet in the parish of Leek, co. of Stafford, 5 m. W.S.W. from Leek, having a school with a small endowment. Pop., in 1831, 118. A. P., with Enden and Longdon, £6,294.

STANLEY WITH WRENTHORP, a township in the parish of Wakefield, W. R., co. of York, 2 m. N.N.E. from Wakefield. Here is a lunatic asylum for paupers. Roman antiquities have been found so often and so abundant, that there can be no doubt of its having been a station occupied by that people. According to old ballad lore it was also the scene of the conflict between Robin Hood, Will Scarlet, Little John, and the Pindar of Wakefield. Pop., in 1801, 3260; in 1831, 5045. A. P., £11,318.

STANLEY (KING'S), a parish in the lower division of the hundred of Whitstone, co. of Gloucester. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester, rated at £18 15s. 2½d. Church ded. to St George. Patrons, the master and fellows of Jesus college, Cambridge. This is said to have been the residence of one of the Mercian kings. That portion of the parish called the Borough, is a distinct tything, and with other privileges possesses the right of choosing two bailiffs, who execute the office of constable within its precincts. The inhabitants are principally employed in the clothing manufacture. Here are places of worship for the Baptists and the Wesleyan Methodists; and three small schools kept by females, are supported on an endowment of £18 per annum. Distance from Stroud, 3 m. S.W. Pop., in 1801, 1134; in 1831, 2438. A. P., £3,745.

STANLEY-ST-LEONARDS, a parish in the lower division of the hundred of Whitstone, co. of Gloucester. Living, a curacy in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester, certified at £34, returned at £105. The church—an ancient structure in the form of a cross, having a low tower at the intersection constructed with double walls, with a passage and recess between them—is ded. to St Swithin. Here was a monastery of Benedictines, the revenues of which at the dissolution were estimated at £126 0s. 8d. Of the monastic buildings considerable portions yet remain. The kitchen is now converted into a dairy. Stanley, in 1686, was almost entirely destroyed by a fire, and has never been restored to its former extent. Previously to this event it had a market on Saturday, and two fairs, St Swithin's day and November 6th. They are still held, but the market is discontinued. The inhabitants are, many of them, employed in the woollen manufacture, and there is a school endowed with lands yielding about £40 per annum. Distance from Stroud, 4½ m. W.S.W. Pop., in 1801, 590; in 1831, 942. A. P., £2,423.

STANLEY-PONT-LARGE, a parish in the hundred of Kiltgate, co. of Gloucester. Living, a curacy to the vicarage of Toddington, in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester, not in charge. Patron, the vicar of Toddington. Distance from Winchcombe, 2 m. N.W. Pop., in 1801, 44; in 1831, 62. A. P., £995.

STANLOW-HOUSE, an extra-parochial district in the hundred of Wirral, co.-palatine of Chester. "John, constable of Chester and baron of Halston, founded here, A. D. 1172, an abbey for forty Cistercian monks to the honour of the Blessed Virgin Mary; but upon a representation to Pope Nicholas IV., that by reason of its low situation this monastery was often much incommoded by the overflowings of the sea or water of the Mersey, he gave leave to translate these religious to Whalley, in Lancashire, where they had a better habitation provided for them by the pious munificence of Henry Lacy, earl of Lincoln, about the year 1296." There were only four monks left here when a small cell seems to have continued till the dissolution. Some remains of the building is still visible as forming part of a farm-house. Distance from Chester, 8 m. N.E. Pop., in 1801, 10; in 1831, 13. A. P. not returned separately.

STANMER, a parish in the hundred of Ringmer, rape of Pevensey. Living, a rectory, a peculiar in the dio. of Canterbury, rated at £16, returned at £130. Patron, the archbishop of Canterbury. Distance from Brighton, 4 m. N.N.E. Pop., in 1801, 105; in 1831, 123. A. P., £654.

STANMORE (GREAT), a parish in the hundred of Gore, co. of Middlesex. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Middlesex and dio. of London, rated at £10. Church ded. to St John the Evangelist. Patron, in 1829, George Drummond, Esq. Stanmore is beautified with many handsome seats and villas belonging to the aristocratic classes of society; and the elevation of its common is such, that the ground-floors of the houses are said to be on a level with the battlements of the tower of Harrow. It was at this place the prince regent, at the close of the late war, received his illustrious guests the emperor of Russia and the king of Prussia, in company with Louis XVIII.; and the late celebrated Dr Parr, at one period of his life, kept a small school here. Distance from London, 10 m. N.W. Pop., in 1801, 722; in 1831, 1144. A. P., in 1815, £6,257; in 1828, £4,313.

STANMORE (LITTLE), a parish in the hundred of Gore, co. of Middlesex. Living, a curacy, a donative in the archd. of Middlesex and dio. of London, not in charge. The church—an elegant structure, erected partly by the munificence of the duke of Chandos, to whom it is also indebted for its splendid internal decorations—is ded. to St Lawrence. The duke of Chandos, whose building taste has been immortalized by Pope, had his splendid mansion of Canons in this parish; and the rebuilding of the church here in 1715, seems to have been under his inspection, and, as noticed above, in a great measure at his expense. Laguerre had the painting of the ceiling and walls; a picture of the nativity and a dead Christ, by Bellucci, stands on each side of the altar, behind which is a recess for the organ, supported by Corinthian columns; Moses receiving the law, and Christ preaching, are represented in the back ground. Handel, who was chapel master at Canons, is said to have composed his sacred drama of Esther for the consecration of this church. On the north side of the chancel a vault was constructed by the noble duke for the interment of his family; and in a large chamber over it is a monument to the memory of his ancestor, James, first duke of Chandos. There is here a free grammar school with a considerable endowment; and there are almshouses for seven poor persons, with an endowment of £45 per annum. Distance from Edgware, $\frac{1}{2}$ m. N.W. Pop., including part of the village of Edgware, in 1801, 424; in 1831, 876. A. P., £4,730.

STANNEY (GREAT), a township in the parish of Stoke, co.-palatine of Chester, $4\frac{1}{2}$ m. N. from Chester. It is intersected by the Chester canal. The soil is remarkable for the alluvial matter of which it is composed, and large trees are dug out of the meadows. Pop., in 1801, 12; in 1831, 31. A. P., £1,966.

STANNEY (LITTLE), a township in the parish of Stoke, co.-palatine of Chester, 5 m.

N. from Chester. Pop., in 1801, 203; in 1831, 201. A. P., £1,203.

STANNINGFIELD, a parish in the hundred of Thedwestry, co. of Suffolk. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich, rated at £8 0s. 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Church ded. to St Nicholas. Patrons, in 1829, T. Cook, Esq., and others. The ingenious Mrs Inchbald, authoress of novels, plays, criticisms, &c., was a native of this parish. Distance from Bury-St-Edmunds, 5 m. S.E. Pop., in 1801, 248; in 1831, 306. A. P., £1,788.

STANNINGTON, a parish in the west division of Castle ward, co. of Northumberland. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Northumberland and dio. of Durham, rated at £5 13s. 4d. The church—which is very ancient, had formerly a chantry, and in the windows of which are some admirable specimens of stained glass—is ded. to St Mary. Patron, the bishop of Durham. The river Blythe divides this parish into two parts, called North and South. Coal is abundant in the mines, in which the greater part of the inhabitants find employment. There is here also a pretty extensive manufactory of floor-cloth. The Wesleyan Methodists and the Unitarians have here places of worship; and there is an endowment which educates eleven poor children. Distance from Morpeth, 5 m. S.S.E. Pop., in 1801, 1252; in 1831, 1021. A. P., £14,091.

STANSFIELD, a parish in the hundred of Risbridge, co. of Suffolk. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich, rated at £11 9s. 4 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Church ded. to All Saints. Patron, the lord-chancellor. Distance from Clare, 5 m. N.N.E. Pop., in 1801, 376; in 1831, 470. A. P., £2,311.

STANSFIELD, a township in the parish of Halifax, W. R., co. of York, extending along the north bank of the Calder nearly six miles. Several rude pillars are met with in this township, which have been characterised—how truly we cannot pretend to determine—as Druidical remains. Distance from Halifax, $4\frac{1}{2}$ m. S.W. Pop., in 1801, 4768; in 1831, 8262. A. P., £7,639.

STANSTEAD, a parish in the hundred of Wrotham, lathe of Aylesford, co. of Kent. Living, a curacy to the rectory of Wrotham, a peculiar in the dio. of Canterbury, not in charge. Church ded. to St Mary. Patron, the rector of Wrotham. Distance from Wrotham, 2 m. N. Pop., in 1801, 249; in 1831, 262. A. P., £1,554.

STANSTEAD, a parish in the hundred of Babergh, co. of Suffolk. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich, rated at £10. Church ded. to St James. Patron, in 1829, the Rev. S. Sheen. Distance from Claro, 5 m. E.N.E. Pop., in 1801, 256; in 1831, 353. A. P., £1,453.

STANSTEAD-ABBOTS, a parish in the hundred of Braughin, co. of Hertford. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Middlesex and dio. of London, rated at £10, returned at £120. Church ded. to St James. Patron, in 1829, W. H. Field, Esq. Stanstead-Abbots, which was anciently a borough town, is situated in an almost insulated vale, being bounded on the west by the navigable river Lea, on the north by the Ashe, and on the east and south-east by the Stort, also navigable. Here stood the Rye-house, famous in history for a supposed plot in the reign of Charles II. Part of the ancient structure still remains, and has been converted into the parish workhouse. Here is a free grammar school with an endowment of £20 per annum; and almshouses for six poor widows, who receive each two shillings per week. Distance from Hoddesdon, 3 m. E.N.E. Pop., in 1801, 861; in 1831, 696. A. P., £4,329.

STANSTEAD-MOUNTFITCHET, a parish partly in the hundred of Clavering, but chiefly in that of Uttlesford, co. of Essex, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Essex and dio. of London, rated at £13 16s. 8d. Church ded. to St Mary. Patron, in 1829, E. F. Maitland, Esq. The Independents have here a place of worship, and a Sabbath school is supported by voluntary contributions. Distance from Chelmsford, 18 m. N.W. Pop., in 1801, 1285; in 1831, 156. A. P., £7,307.

STANTHORNE, a township in the parish of Davenham, co.-palatine of Chester, 1 m. W.N.W. from Middlewich. Pop., in 1801, 120; in 1831, 149. A. P., 2,065.

STANTON, a chapelry in the parish of Youlgrave, co. of Derby, a curacy in the archd. of Derby and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, not in charge. Patron, in 1829, Sir Francis Burdett. Stanton is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of its court of pleas for the recovery of small debts. Distance from Bakewell, 3½ m. S.S.E. Pop., in 1801, 603; in 1831, 744. A. P., £1,808.

STANTON AND NEWHALL, a chapelry in the parish of Stapenhill, co. of Derby, a curacy in the archd. of Derby and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, not in charge. The parish is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and subject to its court of pleas for the recovery of small debts. Distance from Burton-upon-Trent, 2 m. S.S.E. STANTON, a hamlet in the parish of Urawick, co.-palatine of Lancaster, 3 m. S.S.W. from Ulverstone. Pop. returned with the parish.

STANTON, a township in the parish of Longhorsley, co. of Northumberland. From the many foundations of buildings which are visible here, this is supposed to have been at one time a place of much more importance than it is at present. The ancient manor-house has been turned into a poor-house, and a chapel which stood a little to the north has entirely disappeared. Here is a colliery and a number of lime-quarries, and from an eminence called Ruffe-Law, there is obtained one of the finest views in the north of England. Distance from Morpeth, 5½ m. W.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 178; in 1831, 135. A. P. with the parish.

STANTON, a township in the parish of Ellastone, co. of Stafford. It is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and subject to its court of pleas for the recovery of small debts. Distance from Ashbourn, 3½ m. W. Pop., in 1801, 402; in 1831, 371. A. P., £1,452.

Patron, the bishop of Oxford. Stanton-Harcourt lies at the confluence of the small river Windrush-with-the-Thames. It was gifted by Queen Adeliza, second wife of Henry I., to one of her kinswomen, whose daughter married Robert de Harcourt, whence its adjunct. In the ancient tower are three rooms above each other in good repair, the uppermost of which is called Pope's study, being the room where that poet is said to have translated his fifth volume of Homer. In the church are two epitaphs written by Pope, and one by Congreve. Some admirable monuments adorn the Harcourt aisle. There is a kitchen here which bears marks of great antiquity. Its erection has not been recorded, but it was repaired in the reign of Henry IV. Its appearance is much the same as that of the abbot's kitchen at Glastonbury. Here are some antique remains called the Devil's Quoits, supposed, upon what grounds we know not, to be commemorative of a victory gained by the Saxons over the Britons, in which upwards of 2000 of the latter were slain. Distance from Witney, 4½ m. S.E. Pop., in 1801, 504; in 1831, 657. A. P., £4,939.

STEPNEY,

A parish in the Tower division of the hundred of Ossulstone, co. of Middlesex. The living is a rectory, a peculiar of the commissary of London, concurrently with the consistorial court of the bishop, rated at £73 6s. 8d. The church, a spacious structure of flint and stone, principally in the later style of English architecture, with a low broad tower strengthened by buttresses, and surmounted by a turret crowned with a small dome, is ded. to St Dunstan. The parish of Stepney forming part of the eastern suburb of the metropolis, is situated on the north bank of the Thames. It extends for a considerable distance from the river to the principal road leading into Essex, and comprises many handsome ranges of buildings, with numerous handsome houses in detached situations. It is inhabited chiefly by persons connected with the shipping in the river. The commercial road leading from Whitechapel to the East and West India docks, passes through the parish. It is seventy feet wide, and has a pavement on each side eight feet in width, and to its formation and repair all houses within the distance of a hundred yards on each side are assessed two shillings and ninepence in the pound. On the east side of the hamlet of Ratcliffe at the junction of the Regents canal with the Thames, is a basin or dock capable of containing 100 ships, and on the banks of the same canal, which crosses the Mile End road under a stone-bridge, are several coal and timber wharfs. In the hamlets of Mile-End, Old town, and Mile-End, New town, are a number of extensive breweries, a large distillery, an extensive floor-cloth manufactory, a manufactory of tobacco-pipes, and a spacious nursery ground. In the hamlet of Ratcliffe, the manufactories for sail-cloth, sails, chain-cables and mooring-chains, steam-engines and machinery, connected with the docks, are numerous, and upon the most extensive scale. There are here also most extensive establishments belonging to coopers for the West India trade, timber and hoop-merchants, ship-chandlers, sugar-boilers, rope-makers, &c. &c., for which its situation renders it so peculiarly favourable. A charter for a weekly market and an annual fair to be held on Mile-End green, was granted by Charles II. The market, however, is now held at Whitechapel. The fair was removed to Stratford-le-Bow, and finally suppressed.

Government.—Stepney is paved and lighted with gas, under the superintendence of commissioners appointed by act of parliament, and it is supplied with water by the East London company from their works at Old Ford, about two miles distant. The parish is within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, who hold their sittings at the police office in Lambeth-street Whitechapel for the despatch of business relating to the hamlets of Mile-End, Old and New towns, and at the Thames police-office, Wapping, for what relates to the hamlet of Ratcliffe. Its local affairs are under the superintendence of 12 trustees, who, pursuant to the provisions of an act passed in 1810, are elected annually by the inhabitants at the town-hall in White-Horse-street on Easter-Monday, where, at the same time, the church-wardens, two overseers, a constable, and 14 head boroughs are chosen. It is under the jurisdiction of the court of requests for the Tower Hamlets, held in Osborne-street, Whitechapel, for the recovery of small debts, and within the limits of the new police establishment. It was long an established opinion that all persons born at sea belonged to the parish of Stepney. How or in what manner this idea originated, we do not know; but persons have been passed from almost every parish in England to Stepney in consequence of it, and the parish has of course been subjected to serious expense. Some late decisions of the higher courts have tended to counteract this opinion, though it is not, as we suppose, finally set at rest.

Description.—Stepney was anciently of much greater extent than it is at present, a number of suburban hamlets having been, on account of their extent, at different times separated from it. From the then seclusion of its situation and the beauty of its varied and rural scenery, it was the favourite residence of many persons of distinction. Isabel, countess of Rutland, had a seat here in the end of the 16th century, at which period Sir Thomas Luke, secretary of state to James I., was also an occasional resident. Henry, the first marquis of Worcester, had a mansion near the parsonage house, of which the gateway, handsomely built of brick with a turret on one of the angles, is still preserved. It forms part of a house in which Dr Richard Mead was born, and in which he resided for many years. Of the ancient mansion itself, the site is now occupied as an academy for the education of young men intended for the ministry among the Baptists. Sir Henry Collet had a splendid residence to the west of the church called the Great Place, the site of which is now occupied by a place of public entertainment, known by the name of Spring Gardens. Traces of the moat that surrounded the ancient mansion, are still visible on two sides of the pleasure grounds.

History.—Stepney has at different times suffered severely under the calamitous inflictions of Divine Providence. In the year 1625, 2978 persons belonging to the parish died of the plague, and in 1665, upwards of 6583 persons died of the same disorder. So great was the depopulation in the latter year, that it is recorded, from the circumstance of the parish being inhabited principally by seafaring people, as a seeming impossibility at that time to man the fleet, which was preparing to engage in the Dutch war. In 1794, a pitch kettle, in a ship-builder's yard, having been allowed to boil over, occasioned a conflagration which consumed a full half of the hamlet of Ratcliffe, leaving several hundreds of families with nothing more than the clothes in which they escaped for their lives. Tents were furnished from the Tower, and pitched in an inclosure near the church for the benefit of the sufferers, and provisions issued for their temporary subsistence; £16,000 was also subscribed at Lloyd's for their benefit. Still many families were irretrievably ruined.

Benevolent Institutions.—Besides the parish church, of which we have already spoken, a splendid chapel has recently been erected with the concurrence and by the aid of the parliamentary commissioners. Here are also places of worship for the Society of Friends, the Independents, the Huntingdonian, the Wesleyan and the Calvinistic Methodists. The charity schools are, one at Ratchiffe, established in 1710 with a liberal endowment in lands and money. It has of late been enlarged and adapted to educate upwards of 300 children upon the national plan. Of the boys 40, and of the girls 25, are apprenticed every year; a suit of clothes is given to each on the occasion, generally green. A second school was established at Mile-End, Old Town, 1714, by subscription. It has now, from various bequests, an annual income of £144. One hundred and sixty boys, and one hundred and five girls are educated in this school upon the national plan. A third is the Stepney-street charity school, which was founded by subscription in 1788. It has an endowment of £188 per annum. It educates 130 boys and 60 girls. The fourth school is the charity school for Mile-End, New Town, established 1785, by subscription, by which means it is still principally supported. Thirty boys and thirty girls are educated here. There are Sabbath schools in connexion with the several congregations in the parish. Almshouses for 14 aged persons of both sexes, members, or belonging to members of the Coopers' company, were in 1538, founded by Toby Wood, Esq., and Mr Cloker, members of that company. The original endowment allowed £1 6s. 8d. for each of the inmates. Adjoining these almshouses is the free grammar school, liberally endowed for thirty boys, by Nicholas Gibson, master of the Coopers' company, and sheriff of London in the reign of Henry VIII. Among other eminent characters we observe the celebrated Bishop Andrews, to have been one who received here the rudiments of his education. In the great fire of 1794 the whole premises were burnt to the ground. They were rebuilt and more liberally endowed by the company in 1796. They now accommodate sixteen men and six women, who receive each a chaldron and a half of coal, with £15 each, annually. In the school at present, 50 boys are taught English reading and writing, and arithmetic. The master has a salary of £73 10s., per annum, a free house, and an allowance of coal, with the liberty of taking as many private pupils as his house can accommodate. The buildings occupy three sides of a quadrangle, having a chapel in the central range.

The almshouses belonging to the Vintners' company, originally founded in Thames-street, being burnt down in the great fire, 1666, were afterwards transferred to Mile-End. They consist of twelve separate tenements and a chapel, and are endowed for twelve widows of freemen of the Vintners' company, who receive each £36 per annum. A chaplain, who has a yearly salary of £52 10s., performs divine service in the chapel weekly. The brethren of the Trinity-house have also almshouses here, consisting of twelve sets of apartments with a chapel in the centre, in the front windows of which are several armorial bearings in stained glass. In Mile-End road are 24 almshouses belonging to the Drapers' company, founded for aged men members of that company, with a school attached for 100 boys. The annual income is upwards of £4,000 per annum. The almsmen receive each £20 per annum, a chaldron and a half in coal, with a gown every third year. The boys are instructed in English reading, writing, and arithmetic, and on leaving school receive an apprentice fee, or the sum of £2 10s. to fit them out for service. The head master has a salary of £120, the second of £90 per annum, with house rent free and four chaldrons of coal annually. A chaplain, appointed by the master and wardens of the Drapers' company, has an annual stipend of £31 10s., and performs divine service in the chapel every Sabbath morning, on Christmas day, and Good Friday. John Fuller founded, 1592, and endowed with £50 per annum, twelve almshouses for 12 aged unmarried men. The Mercers' almshouses, close upon the churchyard, were founded 1691, and endowed by Dame Mico for 10 aged widows, who receive each £30 per annum. In 1715, Mrs Bowry erected eight almshouses between Mile-End and Stratford-le-Bow, and endowed them for decayed seamen and their widows. Four almshouses in the Grove-road, Mile-End, were founded by Captain James Cook and his wife, Dame Alice Row, for widows and seamen of Stepney. Mile-End has the exclusive right of presenting to these houses, on condition of keeping them in repair. In Mile-End Old-town, are eight almshouses founded and endowed by John Pennell, for aged widows, four of them to be widows of seamen belonging to the Hon. East India Company's service. Each of the inmates receives a monthly allowance of 6s. 8d., seven sacks of coal yearly, and a gown every alternate year. The East London institution for lying-in women, established by subscription, is handsomely supported and judiciously regulated. At Mile-End Old-town is the Jews' hospital for aged poor and for the destitute young belonging to that people domiciled in England, and directly opposite to it is the hospital for Spanish and Portuguese Jews. At a short distance, on the north side of the road, are two spacious cemeteries belonging to the Portuguese Jews, and a third belonging to the German Jews, in which several rabbins and other exalted individuals of that nation are interred. Distance from St Paul's cathedral, 3 m. E. Pop., in 1801, 24,060; in 1831, 67,872. A. P., £193,408.

STERNDALÉ - EARL WITH MIDDLE-QUARTER, a chapelry in the parish of Hartington, co. of Derby. Living, a curacy in the peculiar jurisdiction of the dean's court for the manor of Hartington, in the archd. of Derby and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, certified at £3. The chapel is of recent erection. Patron, the vicar of Hartington. The Peak-

Forest and Cromford rail-road passes through the township, and it has a small bequest which educates four children. Distance from Buxton, $5\frac{1}{2}$ m. S.S.E. Pop., in 1801, 376; in 1831, 354. A. P., £3,006.

STERNFIELD, a parish in the hundred of Plumstead, co. of Suffolk. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich, rated at £8 14s. 4d. Church ded. to St Mary Magdalene. Patron, in 1829, C. Long, Esq. Pop., in 1801, 170; in 1831, 203. A. P., £1,309.

STERT, a parish in the hundred of Swanborough, co. of Wilts. Living, a curacy to the vicarage of Urchfont, a peculiar in the archd. and dio. of Salisbury. Church ded. to St James. Patron, the vicar of Urchfont. Pop., in 1801, 130; in 1831, 186. A. P., £1,464.

STETCHWORTH, a parish in the hundred of Radlow, co. of Cambridge. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Ely, rated at £10 12s. 1d., returned at £100. Church ded. to St Peter. Patron, in 1829, R. Eaton, Esq. Here is an almshouse for four persons, two men and two women, endowed with £30 per annum. Distance from New-Market, 2 m. S.W. Pop., in 1801, 342; in 1831, 545. A. P., £1,986.

STETON, a township in the parish of Bolton-Percy, lower division of the ainstey of the city of York, 7 m. S.W. from York. Pop., in 1801, 77; in 1831, 83. A. P., £1,382.

STEVENAGE, a market town and parish in the hundred of Broadwater, co. of Hertford. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Huntingdon and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £32 6s. 8d. The church, which stands on an eminence about half a mile from the town, having its approach through a fine avenue of trees, is ded. to St Nicholas. The town is pleasantly situated on the great north road from London to Edinburgh. It is chiefly comprised in one long street, the houses being but indifferently built. It has, however, some good shops, and it is well supplied with water. The principal trade is that of carcase butchers, who dispose of the slaughtered cattle at the Hertford and London markets. The females of the town and its vicinity are chiefly employed in making straw plait. A weekly market was established here by charter from James I., confirmed by William and Mary, but from the contiguity of other towns in which large markets are held, that of Stevenage has been discontinued. A fair is still held September 22d. Petty sessions for the division are held here, and a manorial court annually by the bishop of London. Stevenage formed originally a part of the demesne of the Saxon kings. By Edward the Confessor it was gifted to the abbey of Westminster, on the suppression of which it was by Edward VI. given to the see of London, to which the manor still belongs. On the south of the town are six large barrows, supposed to be of Danish origin, and sepulchral monuments. In Humbley-wood, about half a mile to the east of these barrows, are the apparent remains of an entrenched camp, but of unknown origin. Here are places of worship for the Independents and the Wesleyan Methodists, and a free school was founded in the reign of Queen Mary. The teacher is appointed by the master and fellows of Trinity college, Cambridge, and the trustees are chosen from among the gentlemen in the neighbourhood. The poor children of the parish are admitted at 2s. 6d. per quarter, those not belonging to the parish pay 5s. per quarter. The school stands at the north end of the town, and near it a commodious house for the master, with garden and orchard attached. Here is also an almshouse for three poor persons, called All-Christians-Souls-House. It was founded, 1501, by Stephen Hallard, who in the deed of settlement directed that the inmates should every day repeat a certain prayer for his soul and for all Christian souls. Distance from London, 31 m. N.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 1254; in 1831, 1859. A. P., £5,001.

STEVENTON, a parish in the hundred of Ock, co. of Berks. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Berks and dio. of Salisbury, rated at £9 5s. 2½d. Church ded. to St Michael. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Westminster. The village has an ancient cross, consisting of a tall shaft rising from a base of a few steps. Of the castle, erected here in 1281 by Baldwin Wake, not a vestige remains. Here was a priory of Black monks, a cell to the abbey of Bec, in Normandy, founded in the reign of Henry I., which, at the suppression of foreign houses, was bestowed upon the abbot and convent of Westminster, and, as parcel of their possessions, was regranted to the dean and chapter there, upon the new foundation, 34th Henry VIII. Twelve children are instructed at a Sabbath school, supported upon a small bequest by John Anna, in 1811. Distance from Abingdon, 5 m. S.S.W. Pop., in 1801, 537; in 1831, 691. A. P., £4,073.

STEVENTON, a parish in the hundred of Basingstoke, Basingstoke division of the co. of Southampton. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Winchester, rated at £11 4s. 7d. Church ded. to St Nicholas. Patron, Edward Knight, Esq. The manor-house is very ancient, and appears to have been at one period a magnificent pile. Distance from Whitechurch, 6 m. E. Pop., in 1801, 153; in 1831, 197. A. P., £1,636.

STEVEINGTON, a parish in the hundred of Willey, co. of Bedford. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Bedford and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £12 13s. 4d., returned at £11 18s. Church ded. to St Michael. Patron, in 1829, the duke of Bedford. Distance from Bedford, $5\frac{1}{2}$ m. W.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 415; in 1831, 500. A. P., £1,766.

STEWKLEY, a parish in the hundred of Cottesloe, co. of Buckingham. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Buckingham and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £9 9s. 7d. The church—a very ancient structure, consisting of a nave and chancel, with a square tower, the upper part of which is surrounded with 32 small intersecting circular arches attached to a wall—is ded. to St Mary. Patron, the bishop of Oxford. Distance from Winslow, 6 m. E.S.E. Pop., in 1801, 680; in 1831, 1053. A. P., £6,341.

STEWTON, a parish in the Wold division of the hundred of Louth-Eske, parts of Lindsey, co. of Lincoln. Living, a discharged rector in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £7, returned at £77. Church ded. to St Andrew. Patron, in 1829, Dudley North, Esq. Distance from Louth, 4 m. E. Pop., in 1801, 45; in 1831, 69. A. P., £1,228.

STEYNING, a borough, market-town, and parish, in the hundred of Steyning, rape of Bramber, co. of Sussex. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Chichester, rated at £15. The church—considered a very beautiful specimen of Saxon architecture, and supposed to have belonged to a monastic establishment of Benedictines—is of great antiquity, but in a ruinous condition, the transept and choir being entirely destroyed. It is ded. to St Andrew. It is supposed to contain the remains of St Cuthman, and Ethelwulf, king of Wessex, father of Alfred the Great. Patron, in 1829, Sir J. C. Honeywood, Bart. Steyning is situated at the foot of a hill near the river Adur, over which it has a bridge. It consists of four transverse streets, the principal of which runs south-west and north-east. Great improvements, through the liberality of the duke of Norfolk, have of late years been effected. Barracks for infantry, on an extensive scale, were built here during the late war, but they have since been taken down. There is also a race course formed on the downs in the neighbourhood of the town, but no races have been run for a number of years back. In the vicinity of the town the land is fertile, and the adjoining downs are celebrated as excellent for rearing sheep. The principal traffic of the place is in cattle; for these is a monthly market. Vast numbers are also disposed of at the fairs, which are held June 9th, September 20th, and October 10th. At the latter fair especially, great numbers of Welsh cattle are disposed of, together with horses, hogs, wheat, &c. The ordinary market day is on Wednesday. Steyning was a borough by prescription, governed by a constable, chosen annually at a court leet held by the lord of the manor, and sent two members to parliament. It has been disfranchised by the reform act. Here is a free school, founded in 1614, by William Holland, a native and alderman of Chichester, the income is upwards of £80 per annum. A school upon the national plan is supported by subscription. John Pell, celebrated for his skill in mathematics, was educated at the free school here. Distance from Chichester, 24 m. E.N.E.; from London, 49½ m. S.W. Pop., in 1801, 1174; in 1831, 1436. A. P., £4,411.

STIBBORD, a parish in the hundred of Gallow, co. of Norfolk. Living, a discharged rector with that of Colkirk, in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich, rated at £11 18s. 4d. Church ded. to All Saints. Patron, the rector of Colkirk. Distance from Fakenham, 4½ m. E.S.E. Pop., in 1801, 283; in 1831, 305. A. P., £1,651.

STIBBINGTON WITH SIBSON, a parish in the hundred of Norman-Cross, co. of Huntingdon. Living, a rector in the archd. of Huntingdon and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £7 14s. 6d. Church ded. to St John the Baptist. Patron, in 1829, the duke of Bedford. Distance from Wandsford, 1 m. S.E. Pop., in 1801, 324; in 1831, 456. A. P., £2,786.

STICKFORD, a parish in the west division of the soke of Bolingbroke, parts of Lindsey, co. of Lincoln. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £6 3s. 6d., returned at £140. Church ded. to St Helen. Patron, the bishop of Lincoln. Here is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Distance from Spilsby, 7 m. S.W. Pop., in 1801, 253; in 1831, 425. A. P., £1,683.

STICKNEY, a parish in the west division of the soke of Bolingbroke, parts of Lindsey, co. of Lincoln. Living, a rector in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln. Church ded. to St Luke. Patron, in 1829, the Rev. Richard Loxham. The Wesleyan Methodists have here a place of worship, and there is a free grammar school with a liberal endowment. Distance from Bolingbroke, 2½ m. E.N.E. Pop., in 1801, 495; in 1831, 809. A. P., £3,537.

STIDD, an extra-parochial liberty in the lower division of the hundred of Blackburn, co-palatine of Lancaster, 7 m. N.N.W. from Blackburn. Here are still the ruins of an ancient chapel, endowed with £25 per annum, to preserve which, divine service is occasionally performed by the vicar of Ribchester among the ruins. Pop. with Ribchester.

STIFFKEY, a parish in the hundred of Greenhoe, co. of Norfolk. The living comprises the united parishes of St John and St Mary, with the rectory of Monston, in the archd. and dio. of Norwich, rated at £25. Patron, the marquess of Townshend. Distance from Wells, 2 m. E. Pop., in 1801, 334; in 1831, 460. A. P., £1,710.

Patrons, the president and fellows of Pembroke college, Oxford. Distance from Gray's-Thurrock, 2 m. N.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 215; in 1831, 274. A. P., £2,660.

STILLINGFLEET, a parish and township, partly in the liberty of St Peter of York, but chiefly in the wapentake of Ouse and Derwent, N. R., co. of York. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Cleveland and dio. of York, rated at £9 7s. 6d. Church ded. to St Helen. Patrons, the dean and chapter of York. Here is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists, and a small bequest for teaching poor children. Distance from York, 8 m. S.W. Pop. of the township, with Moreby, 304; of the entire parish, 2500; in 1831, of the former, 406; of the latter, 5962. A. P. of the township, £4,124; of the entire parish, £43,414.

STILLINGTON, a township in the parish of Redmarshall, co-palatine of Durham, 6½ m. N.W. from Stockton-upon-Tees. Pop., in 1801, 69; in 1831, 96. A. P., £754.

STILLINGTON, a parish in the liberty of St Peter of York, E. R., locally in the wapentake of Bulmer, N. R., co. of York. Living, a discharged vicarage, a peculiar of the prebendary of Stillington, in the cathedral church of York, rated at £4 15s. 5d. Church ded. to St Nicholas. Patron, the prebendary of Stillington in York cathedral. This was one of the livings held by the celebrated Lawrence Sterne, author of Tristram Shandy and other works. A national school has been established in the village. Distance from Easingwold, $4\frac{1}{2}$ m. E.S.E. Pop., in 1801, 531; in 1831, 717. A. P., £2,945.

STILTON, a parish in the hundred of Norman-Cross, co. of Huntingdon. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Huntingdon and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £11 5s. 10d. Church ded. to St Mary. Patron, the bishop of Lincoln. Stilton gives name to a peculiar kind of cheese, highly celebrated, and not unfrequently called English Parmesan. The greater part, however, of the cheese sold under the name of Stilton, is made in Leicestershire, 20 miles from that place. Barracks were erected here during the late war, and also a prison for prisoners of war. The town was at one time a market-town, but has dwindled into comparative insignificance. A copious spring, about a quarter of a mile from the town, was at one time celebrated for its medicinal virtues, especially for its efficacy in healing ulcers, which it is said to have lost. The Wesleyans have here a place of worship. Distance from Huntingdon, $12\frac{1}{2}$ m. N.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 509; in 1831, 793. A. P., £2,937.

STINCHCOMBE, a parish in the upper division of the hundred of Berkeley, co. of Gloucester. Living, a curacy in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester, not in charge, returned at £85 18s. 4d. STOCK-DENNIS, a tything in the parish of Tintinhull, co. of Somerset. This was formerly a parish; a rectory, rated at £20, but the church having been destroyed and the place depopulated, its parochial rights were withdrawn. Pop., in 1831, 13. A. P. with Tintinhull.

STOCKHILL AND SUNDHOLM, a township in the parish of St John, liberty of the town of Beverley, E. R., co. of York, 7 m. N.W. from Workop. Pop., in 1811, 30; in 1831, 34. A. P., £725.

STOCK-GAYLAND, a parish in the hundred of Brownshall, Sturminster division of the co. of Dorset. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, rated at £5 7s. 1d. Patron, in 1829, the Rev. F. Yeatman. Distance from Sherborne, 7 m. E.S.E. Pop., in 1801, 71; in 1831, 66. A. P., £1,636.

STOCKBRIDGE, a borough, market-town, and parish, in the hundred of King's-Som-bourne, Andover division, co. of Southampton, but possessing separate jurisdiction. Living, a curacy, annexed to the vicarage of King's-Som-bourne, in the archd. and dio. of Winchester, not in charge. Church ded. to St Peter. Stockbridge—situated on the great Western road from London to Exeter—consists of one long street, which at the west end is crossed by the Test, and at the east end by the Andover canal, over each of which are substantial bridges, that over the Test especially, which is particularly handsome. Between these two streams the street is intersected by five smaller ones, over each of which there is a bridge. It is lighted at the expense of the earl of Grosvenor; watched by means of a subscription raised by the inhabitants; and the supply of water is excellent and abundant. Inns and public houses are numerous, and the entertaining the multitude of travellers that regularly or occasionally pass through it, forms the principal business of the inhabitants. A race-course has been formed in the immediate neighbourhood, on which, for some years back, races have been regularly run in the month of June; a handsome plate being given by Earl Grosvenor. The streams are celebrated as trout streams, and gentlemen of the angle are in the habit of meeting here and spending weeks during the season in the enjoyment of their favourite diversion. The nobility and gentry of this and the adjoining counties, are also in the habit of meeting here three or four times a year for recreation, which gives to the place an air of great gayety and contributes materially to the wealth and comfort of the inhabitants. Parchment and glue of good qualities are manufactured here. The market-day is Thursday, and an excellent market-house has been built at the expense of Earl Grosvenor. A fair is held on the 10th of June, at which an immense number of lambs are sold yearly.

Stockbridge is a borough by prescription, and is governed by a bailiff and a constable, who are elected annually at the court-leet of the manor, held by the steward on Easter-Wednesday,—the constable for the last year generally being made bailiff for the year to come. It sent two representatives to parliament since the reign of Elizabeth, until the passing of the reform act, when it was disfranchised. Here is a place of worship for the Independents. Distance from Southampton, 18 m. N.W.; from London, 66 m. W.S.W. Pop., in 1801, 643; in 1831, 851. A. P., £759.

STOCKBURY, a parish in the hundred of Eyborne, lathe of Aylesford, co. of Kent. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury, rated at £9 11s. 0½d. The church—which is spacious and cruciform, built in the early English style, having columns and arches of peculiar elegance, built of Bethesda marble—is ded. to St Mary Magdalene. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Rochester. There are several clusters of straggling houses in this parish which are designated streets, as Stockbury-street, Yelsted-street, &c. There is a fair held, August 2d, for toys, pedlery, &c., and there is a small annuity for educating the children of the poor. In 1746, this place was nearly destroyed by one of those local tempests that occasionally break forth with inconceivable fury. Distance from Milton, 4½ m. W.S.W. Pop., in 1801, 433; in 1831, 618. A. P., £2,714.

STOCKELD, a township in the parish of Spofforth, W. R., co. of York, 2 m. W. from Wetherby. A rock of peculiar form rising from the margin of a lake to the height of 30 feet, and upwards of 60 feet in circumference, is supposed to have given name to this parish, Stockbelt being Dutch for a mis-shapen piece of rock. Pop., in 1831, 62. A. P. not returned separately.

STOCKERSTON, a parish in the hundred of Gartree, co. of Leicester. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Leicester and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £13, returned at £81 18s. 4d. Church ded. to St Peter. Patrons, the master and fellows of St John's college, Cambridge. Here, in honour of the Blessed Virgin, was an almshouse for a chaplain and three poor persons, and lands settled upon them in mortmain to the annual value of £10. Distance from Rockingham, 4½ m. N.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 56; in 1831, 60. A. P., £2,080.

STOCKPORT,

A market-town and parish in the hundred of Macclesfield, co.-palatine of Chester. The livings are St Mary's, a rectory, rated at £70 6s. 8d., and two curacies, St Peter's and St Thomas's, not in charge, all in the archd. and dio. of Chester. The patroness of St Mary's and St Peter's, in 1829, was Mrs Prescott, of St Thomas's, the rector of Stockport.

Description.—The town is most romantically situated on the south bank of the Mersey, which is here joined by the Tame. The ground upon which it is built is remarkable for inequality of surface, and towards the river is of precipitous and difficult ascent. Around this precipitous acclivity the houses rise in successive tiers, from the base to the summit, and the numerous and extensive factories, elevated above each other, when lighted, during the winter months, present an appearance strikingly sublime. Many of the houses in this part of the town have apartments cut out of the solid rock, which is a soft red sandstone. A row of houses on the summit of the rock entirely surrounds the market-place, which is spacious and convenient. From the market-place the town branches off in different directions, and especially along the great roads extends far into the country. Great improvements have been made in the town of late years, one of the principal being a new line of road from Heaton-Norris chapel, on the north side of the Mersey, to Bramhall-Lane, at the southern extremity of the town. This important work is carried through an open and airy district, affording eligible sites for building, and, at the same time, facilities for extending the town. Its especial object was to cross the river without descending to its level, which has been accomplished by the construction of a beautiful bridge of eleven arches across the valley and the river. Of these eleven arches, nine are on the Cheshire, and two on the Lancashire side of the Mersey. The arch over the river has a span of 90 feet, and an elevation of 40 feet above the surface of the water. It is built of hard white stone, from the quarries of Saddleworth and Runcorn. The two arches on the Lancashire side are built of brick. Those on the Cheshire side are carried over several of the streets, the thoroughfare being continued underneath; others have been closed up. For a considerable distance the road is carried by an artificial embankment, formed of earth cut from the hill through which it passes to its junction with the Warrington road, near which it joins the old road at Heaviley, a distance of three miles from its commencement. The whole was executed in two years, at an expense of £40,000. It is 24 yards in width, was opened in 1826 with a splendid procession on the anniversary of the battle of Waterloo, and, from this circumstance, has been called the Wellington road. Between this and the Lancashire bridge, a foot bridge has been lately erected over the Mersey, for the purpose of affording a more direct communication between the town and the township of Heaton-Norris. It was built by means of a subscription among the inhabitants. The town is well paved, lighted with gas, and supplied with water, by a company incorporated by act of parliament. A handsome library and news room has been lately erected. In this institution two subscription libraries have been united, and it is supported by a numerous list of proprietary subscribers. A handsome theatre has also been built, and is open generally for four months during the winter.

Trade.—The trade of Stockport and its numerous manufactures have been greatly increased of late years. The winding and throwing of silk, for which mills were established here upon the Italian plan, and which were, for a long period, the staples of the town, have been in a great degree superseded by the introduction of the cotton manufacture in nearly all its branches, and which is now unquestionably the staple trade of the place. Upwards of 50 cotton factories might be enumerated within the town, or its immediate confines, which are worked by between 60 and 70 steam engines of the aggregate power of 2000 horses, besides several water wheels. Of power looms, nearly 7000 are constantly employed, and calico-printing and dyeing are extensively carried on. One printing house here, that of Marsland & Son, have paid in one year, of duties, upwards of £100,000. The manufacture of hats has been long established, and, besides supplying many of the county markets, affords a very large supply to those of the metropolis. The manufacture of woollen cloth of superior quality, equal in the regularity of its texture and the smoothness of its surface to the best cloths of France, was established here by the late Peter Marsland, Esq., and still meets with great and well-merited encouragement. Many other minor manufactures are carried on, and the construction of the various and complicated machinery used in the different manufactories, is itself an extensive and lucrative branch of business. Coal is abundantly supplied from Poynton, Worth, Norbury, and the neighbouring districts on the line of the Manchester and Ashton canal, which joins the Peak-Porest canal, a branch from which extends to Stockport, supplying it with the necessary article of coal, and affording it an easy communication with the principal towns in the kingdom. The market-day is Friday, and the market is abundantly supplied with every article in demand. Fairs are held March 4th and 25th, May 1st, and October 23d, chiefly for cattle.

Municipal Government.—Stockport was anciently incorporated. It still retains a mayor, though his office is nearly nominal, the town being in the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, who sit daily in the court-house, and hold petty sessions every other week. The police is regulated by commissioners appointed by act of parliament for the general improvement of the town. Courts leet and baron are held twice in the year. At the Michaelmas court the mayor is chosen by the jury, from a leet of four burgesses nominated by the lord of the manor, who appoints two constables, and other officers to the number of 50. The church wardens are appointed by the four lords of the manors of Bramhall, Bredbury, Brinnington, and Norbury, who, in ecclesiastical matters, have been the representatives of the parish time immemorial. A court for the recovery of small debts has been established by act of parliament, the jurisdiction of which extends over the townships of Stockport and Brinnington, with the hamlets of Edgeley and Brinksway. By the reform act Stockport, with the hamlets of Brinksway and Edgeley, and the townships of Brinnington and Heaton-Norris, is constituted a borough, and sends two members to parliament. The mayor is the returning officer.

Benevolent Institutions, &c.—Beside the churches of the establishment, there are here places of worship for the Society of Friends, Primitive Methodists, Wesleyan Methodists, Methodists of the new connection, Unitarians, and Roman Catholics. The free grammar school was founded and endowed with £10 per annum, by Sir Edmund Shaw, citizen and goldsmith of London. Other benefactions have been added, and a school-house has been lately erected at an expense of £4000, though the ground was obtained gratis, through the munificence of the Hon. Frances Maria Warren, Lady Vernon. The national school was established only a few years ago, and is supported by subscription. The school-rooms are handsome, and admirably adapted to the purposes of their erection; nearly 3000 children, of both sexes, are educated in this establishment. A school for all denominations was set on foot in 1805, and a very extensive building of four stories, erected for its use, at an expense of £10,000. Four thousand children belong to this institution, who are instructed by 300 gratuitous teachers. To this establishment are attached branch schools in the vicinity of the town, for which accommodation has been provided, at an expense of £6,000, collected by subscription. These branch schools are attended by upwards of 1500 children, who cannot attend the parent establishment. Sabbath schools are established in connexion with the several congregations in the town. There are six almshouses for six poor men, with an allowance of £1 5s. per annum. A dispensary, with four wards attached, by which upwards of 2,000 patients are relieved annually, is supported by subscriptions. A number of small bequests are applied to different charitable purposes, which it would be tedious to particularize. Distance from Chester, 39 m. E.N.E.; from London, 179 N.N.W. Pop., in 1801, of the town, 14,830; of the entire parish, 27,074; in 1831, of the former, 25,469; of the latter, 66,610. A. P. of the town, £35,865; of the entire parish, £93,368.

STOCKTON-UPON-TEES,

A market town and parish in the south-west division of Stockton ward, co. of Durham. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Durham, not in charge. Church ded. to St Thomas. Patron, the bishop of Durham. The town of Stockton is situated on an eminence on the north bank of the Tees, which is navigable to the town, and even ten miles above it. About the middle of the seventeenth century it consisted of a collection of mean hovels, the better houses being constructed with post and pile. It is now one of the most agreeable and handsome towns in the northern part of the kingdom. The main street, half a mile in length, is broad, and the houses—mostly of brick—well built. A few houses have been built of stone taken from the ruins of the old castle. Smaller streets branch off from the main street towards the river, and on the west side of the town many good houses have of late years been erected. The streets are well paved, and lighted with gas. The river is here crossed by a handsome stone bridge of five arches. By the act of parliament under which this bridge was constructed, an annuity of £90 per annum, and £3 for every acre of land occupied by the road leading to the bridge, was granted to the bishop in lieu of the ferry which previously existed, and of which the bishop claimed to be the proprietor. Lands have been purchased and given to the bishop in lieu of this annuity, and the bridge, since the year 1820, has been toll free.

The market place is ornamented with a Doric column 30 feet in height, erected on the site of an ancient cross, and not far distant stands the town-hall, a handsome and commodious structure, ornamented with a light and beautiful spire. The house is partly occupied as a tavern, and contains an assembly room, a court room, and other apartments for the transaction of public business. A small theatre has been erected, a mechanics' institution, a newsroom, and a subscription library established, and races are annually run in the month of August on a piece of ground in the neighbourhood, called St Carrs. The market days are Wednesday and Saturday, and fairs are held on the last Wednesday before May 13th, and November 23d. Cattle fairs are held on the last Wednesday of every month.

The manufactures carried on here are those of sailcloth, ropes, damask, diaper, huckabuck, and linen. Here are also some iron foundries, a block and pump manufactory, several breweries, some corn mills, a mill for spinning yarn, and one for spinning worsted. Formerly a great source of prosperity of the town was the fishery of the Tees, but this has declined greatly of late years. To the east of the bridge this fishery belongs to the bishop, but under certain regulations is open to poor fishermen. The trade of the town is of considerable extent, carried on chiefly with the Baltic, Hamburg, Norway, and Holland. The port is a member of that of Newcastle-upon-Tyne; the dues are the property of the bishop, and are held in lease by the corporation. Vessels belonging to the Cinque ports pay no dues. Formerly ships of large size were under the necessity of loading and unloading at Portrock, a mile down the river. A canal has of late been cut, by which vessels of 300 tons come up close to the town, by which its trade has been greatly extended. The port has been made a bonding port for certain articles, and its coasting trade is very extensive, comprising the exportation of most articles of agricultural produce, linen and worsted yarns, and especially lead, of which many hundred tons, brought from Yorkshire, Durham, and Northumberland, are annually shipped here.

Stockton consists of two parts, one called the borough, the other the town. That part constituting the borough is all freehold, the other buildings added to the town are copyhold or leasehold, under the vicar, and not within the jurisdiction of the borough. They form, however, but one township, though each has certain peculiar officers. The borough is governed by a mayor, a recorder, and aldermen. The bishop is lord of the borough, and holds courts leet and baron by his steward, who is generally the recorder. Suits of trespass, and debts under £2, are cognizable by these courts, their jurisdiction being confined to the borough. A halmote court is held twice in the year, in which similar causes are tried as in the court baron. Petty sessions for Stockton ward are held here.

Besides the established church, there are here places of worship for the Society of Friends, the Baptists, the Independents, the Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists, Roman Catholics, and Unitarians. Here are several schools with small endowments, or supported by subscription, and there are almshouses for 36 poor persons, also having a small endowment. Joseph Ritson, the well known poet, critic, and antiquary, and Joseph Reed, the dramatist, were both natives of this town. Distance from Durham, 20 m. S.S.E.; from London, 244 m. N.W. Pop., in 1801, of the town, 4009; of the entire parish, 4177: in 1831, of the former, 7763; of the latter, 7991. A. P., of the town, £12,783; of the entire parish, £15,800.

Patron, in 1829, Lord F. Osborne. The church-yard of this parish is the scene of Gray's inimitable poem, the Elegy in a Country Church-yard, and "beneath those rugged elms that yew-trees shade," the ashes of the bard himself repose. In an adjoining field a large sarcophagus has been erected by Mr Penn, of Stoke-Park, to the poet's memory. Here is a school endowed, from various sources, with about £30 per annum, and an hospital for four poor men and two poor women, endowed with a rent charge of about £53 per annum. It was originally built in Stoke-Park, and its founder, Lord Hastings of Sloughborough, becoming one of its inmates, ended his days within its walls, and was buried in the chapel attached. An act having been obtained in 1765 for pulling down the old building, it was refounded on its present site by Mr Penn, who also made a considerable addition to the endowment. STOKE-UPON-TRENT, a parish in the north division of Pirehill, co. of Stafford. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Stafford and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, rated at £41 0s. 10d. The church—erected about the time of the Conquest, and ded. to St Peter—has been superseded by an elegant new one, towards which the Rev. John C. Woodhouse, dean of Lichfield, and rector of the parish, contributed £3000. Josiah Spode, Esq., whose name is carried over the world upon tea-cups and saucers, contributed to the same object £500. This extensive parish, by the great increase of the demand for pottery, has been converted into something very nearly resembling one great town. China and earthenware are the principal articles of manufacture, and they are carried on upon the most extensive scale, several factories employing nearly 2000 men each. Of the different factories, that of Messrs Spode is perhaps the most conspicuous. The Trent passes through the parish, and the Trent and Mersey canal, along the banks of which are numerous wharfs and extensive warehouses, whence the products of the different manufactories are sent, not only to all parts of the kingdom, but to almost all parts of the world. The Baptists, Independents, and Methodists of the Old and New Connexions, have each places of worship here. A school upon the national plan, in which upwards of 700 children of both sexes are educated, is supported by subscription, besides several others upon a smaller scale, in the more remote hamlets. Dr John Lightfoot, an eminent scholar and divine, was a native of this place,—born in 1602—died in 1675. Distance from Newcastle-under-Lyne, 2 m. E. Pop., in 1801, 16,414; in 1831, 37,220. A. Patron, in 1829, William Downes, Esq. Here is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Distance from Acle, 2½ m. E.S.E. Pop. in 1831, 324. A. P., £2,616.

STOKESLEY, a parish and township in the west division of the liberty of Langbaugh, N. R., co. of York. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Cleveland and dio. of York, rated at £30 6s. 10d. Church ded. to St Peter. Patron, the archbishop of York. The town stands on the north bank of the Leven, in the centre of that fruitful tract called Allertonshire, which, at a distance of between four and five miles, is bounded by the Cleveland hills, forming a vast and majestic amphitheatre. It consists chiefly of one spacious street, running from east to west, the houses well built, and in the modern style. The market-day is Saturday, and the market is well supplied. Fairs are held for horses and cattle on the Saturdays before Trinity, Palm-Sunday, and before Lammas-day. Some linen is manufactured. A court leet is held annually, and petty sessions are held every week. Here are places of worship for the Independents, the Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists, and two schools, partly endowed and partly supported by subscriptions. Distance from York, 41 m. N.W.; from London, 242 m. N.W. Pop., in 1801, of the township, 1369; of the entire parish, 1755: in 1831, of the former, 1967; of the latter, 2376. A. P. of the township, £5,688; of the entire parish, £10,678.

STONALL (OVER), a chapelry in the parish of Shenstone, co. of Stafford. Living, a curacy in the archd. of Stafford and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, endowed with £2,000 parliamentary grant. Patron, the vicar of Shenstone. Pop. with the parish.

STONAR, a parish in the hundred of Ringslow, isle of Thanet, lathe of St Augustine, co. of Kent. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury, rated at £3 6s. Church destroyed. Patron, the king. Stonar lays claim to great antiquity, and was at one time of so much importance that the seniority was claimed by the citizens of London, as subject to that port. In 1385, it was by the French reduced to ashes, since which it has never recovered its former consequence. Its market and fairs have long been discontinued, and though the remains of numerous buildings can be traced, it does not contain above one half dozen of inhabited houses. Salt works have been established near the site of the church, and the salt produced is said to possess the qualities of bay salt. Distance from Sandwich, $\frac{3}{4}$ of a m. Pop., in 1801, 33; in 1831, 52. A. P., £1,937.

STONDON-MASSEY, a parish in the hundred of Ongar, co. of Essex. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Essex and dio. of London, rated at £13 6s. 8d. Church ded. to St Peter and St Paul. Patron, in 1829, the Rev. J. Oldham. Distance from Chipping-Ongar, 2 m. S.E. Pop., in 1801, 200; in 1831, 290. A. P., £1,746.

STONE, a parish in the hundred of Aylesbury, co. of Buckingham. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Buckingham and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £9, returned at £140. Church ded. to St John the Baptist. Patron, in 1829, Sir G. Lee, Bart. The Tame separates this parish from Waddesdon. Lace, once a considerable manufacture in this parish, is still partially carried on. The Wesleyan Methodists have two places of worship here, and a national school is supported by subscription. Distance from Aylesbury, 3 m. W.S.W. Pop., in 1801, 515; in 1831, 773. A. P., £3,142.

STONE, a chapelry in the parish of Berkeley, co. of Gloucester. Living, a curacy in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester, not in charge, returned at £39 17s. Chapel ded. to All Saints. Patron, by lapse, the bishop of Gloucester. Distance from Berkeley, 3 m. S.W. Pop., with the tything of Ham, in 1801, 835; in 1831, 903. A. P., £8,069.

STONE, a parish in the hundred of Oxney, lathe of Shepway, co. of Kent. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury, rated at £8 14s. 4 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Church—which is spacious and handsome—ded. to St Mary. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Canterbury. A fair is held here on Holy Thursday, and there is a free school supported by subscription. Distance from Tenterden, 6 m. S.E. Pop., in 1801, 346; in 1831, 410. A. P., £5,174.

STONE, a parish in the hundred of Axton, Dartford, and Wilmington, lathe of Sutton-at-Hone, co. of Kent. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Rochester, rated at £26 10s. The church—a peculiarly fine specimen of the later style of English architecture, and containing several ancient stalls remarkable for the elegance of their workmanship, and the delicacy of their pillars, which are of crown marble—is ded. to St Mary. Patron, the bishop of Rochester. The Thames forms the boundary of the parish on the north. The castle of Stone is an ancient castellated building, with a small square tower at the east end. This square tower is the only part of the building that has the appearance of a fortress. This is one of a hundred and fifteen fortresses that were not dismantled in terms of an agreement between King Stephen and Henry II. From the rents of the lands attached to this castle, a salary is paid for 26 sermons annually. They are preached alternately on the Wednesdays, during the summer months, at Gravesend and Dartford, agreeably to the will of Dr Plume, the founder of the Plumian professorship at Cambridge. Distance from Dartford, 2 m. N.E. Pop., in 1801, 403; in 1831, 719. A. P., £3,869.

STONE, a parish in the hundred of Faversham, lathe of Scray, co. of Kent. Living, a curacy in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury, not in charge. Distance from Faversham, 1 m. S.W. Pop., in 1801, 58; in 1831, 80. A. P., £971.

STONE, a hundred in the co. of Somerset. It lies in the south-east of the county, bordering on Dorsetshire, and comprises eight parishes. Pop., in 1831, 7433.

STONE, a market-town and parish in the south division of the hundred of Pirehill, co. of Stafford. Living, a curacy in the archd. of Stafford and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, certified at £4 13s. Church ded. to St Michael.

Patron, the king. The town is situated on the east bank of the Trent, on the great road from London to Liverpool. It consists principally of one long street, with lesser ones branching off from it. It is tolerably well-built, paved, and well-supplied with water. The Trent and Mersey, or Grand Trunk canal passes through the town, running parallel for several miles with the river. The principal office of the company of proprietors of this important navigation is in this town. The principal manufacture of the place is that of shoes, and on a stream which falls into the Trent are several flint and flour mills, there are also in the town two very extensive breweries. The market-day is Tuesday, but owing to the increasing population and the markets lately established among the neighbouring potteries, the market has greatly declined from its former activity. The fairs are Tuesday following Mid-Lent, Shrove Tuesday, Whit-Tuesday, August 5th, and the Tuesday before the feast of St Michael. Except the two last they are little more than nominal. Races are occasionally run in the neighbourhood, and assemblies are sometimes held in the town. Two constables are appointed annually at the court-leet of the lord of the manor, and petty-sessions are held by the county-magistrates once a fortnight. The house of industry is governed by the directors and guardians of the parish, under the authority of an act of parliament. The paupers manufacture the whole of their own clothing. "Wolphere, the first Christian king of Mercia, founded here a college of secular canons, about A. D. 670, in honour of his two sons, Wolfadus and Rufinus, whom he had, before his conversion, barbarously murdered with his own hands, at or near this place. The canons being dispersed during the Danish wars about the time of the Conquest, some few nuns seem to have been in possession of this place, who, by the means of Robert de Stafford, were changed, temp. Hen. I., into a convent of regular canons from Kenelworth, to which house this priory was a cell, till about the year 1260, when another lord, Robert Stafford, got it freed from any subjection to Kenelworth save only the right of patronage and a yearly provision. The Black canons of Stone were endowed, 26th Hen. VIII., with £120 per annum, or after deductions, with clear £119 14s. 11d. ob. as in Speed." Tanner's Not. Mon.

Besides the established church, here are places of worship for Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, and Roman Catholics. A free school was founded and endowed with a small annual income, by the Rev. Thomas Alleyn, in 1058. The master and fellows of Trinity college, Cambridge, are the trustees, and appoint the master, but there are no scholars at present upon the foundation. There is also an endowment of £100 per annum for 10 poor widows. Here, in a field now allotted to the poor, the army of the duke of Cumberland encamped, expecting to intercept Charles Stuart, in 1745. Charles, however, taking the route by Leek, avoided the encounter. The late celebrated naval commander, Earl St Vincent, was a native of this parish, and his remains repose in the churchyard here. Distance from Stafford, 7 m. N.N.W.; from London, 141 m. N.N.W. Pop., in 1801, of the town of Stone, 2035, the parish not returned; in 1831, of the town and parish, 7808. A. P. of the entire parish, £31,756.

STONE, a parish in the lower division of the hundred of Halfshire, co. of Worcester. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Worcester, rated at £15. Church ded. to St Mary. Patron, the lord-chancellor. Distance from Kidderminster, 2 m. E.S.E. Pop., in 1801, 403; in 1831, 551. A. P., £4,243.

STONE, a hamlet in the parish of Maltby, W. R., co. of York, 8 m. W.S.W. from Bawtry. Pop. with the parish.

STONE-DELPH. See ALMINGTON.

STONEBECK (DOWN), a township in the parish of Kirkby-Malzeard, lower division of the wapentake of Claro, W. R., co. of York, 14 m. W.S.W. from Ripon. Pop., in 1801, 434; in 1831, 494. A. P., £3,177.

STONEBECK (UPPER), a township in the parish of Kirkby-Malzeard, W. R., co. of York, 16 m. W.N.W. from Ripon. Pop., in 1801, 304; in 1831, 332. A. P., £2,137.

STONE-EASTON, a parish in the hundred of Chewton, co. of Somerset. Living, a curacy to the vicarage of Chewton-Mendip, in the archd. of Wells and dio. of Bath and Wells, not in charge. Distance from Shepton-Mallet, 6½ m. N. Pop., in 1801, 389; in 1831, 386. A. P., £2,627.

STONE-FERRY, a township in the parish of Sutton, E. R., co. of York. Here is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists, an almshouse for seven poor widows, and a school with a small endowment for girls. Distance from Hull, 1½ m. N.E. Pop. with the parish.

STONEGRAVE, a parish and township in the N. R. co. of York. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Cleveland and dio. of York, rated at £33 6s. 8d. Patron, the king. Distance from Helmsley, 5 m. S.E. Pop., in 1801, of the township, 126, of the entire parish, 292; in 1831, of the township, 189, of the entire parish, 327. A. P., of the township, £1,832, of the entire parish, £1,790.

STONEHAM (NORTH), a parish in the hundred of Mansbridge, Fawley division of the co. of Southampton. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Winchester, rated at £21 9s. 7d. The church—in which are deposited the remains of Admiral Lord Hawke—is ded. to St Nicholas. Patron, in 1829, John Fleming, Esq. The village is within the jurisdiction of the Cheyney court held at Winchester, for the recovery of debts, and it has a school with a small endowment. Distance from Southampton, 5 m. N.N.E. Pop., in 1801, 675; in 1831, 766. A. P., £3,456.

STONEHAM (SOUTH), a parish, partly in the co. of the town of Southampton, but chiefly in the hundred of Mansbridge, co. of Southampton. Living, a vicarage, a peculiar in the dio. of Winchester, rated at £12. Church ded. to St Mary. Patron, the rector of St Mary, Southampton. The Itchen, which is navigable from Winchester to Northam where it falls into Southampt-on-water, passes through this parish. Blocks and pumps were formerly made here at Wood-Mills, for the royal navy; but the works were a few years ago consumed by fire, and their site is now occupied by a flour-mill. A mineral spring at Swathling is in great repute for disorders of the eye, and at Bittern in this parish is a school upon the national plan supported by subscription. Distance from Southampton, 3 m. N. Pop., in 1801, 1255; in 1831, 2083. A. P., £5,538.

STONEHOUSE, a parish in the lower division of the hundred of Whitstone, co. of Gloucester. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester, rated at £22. The church—an old Norman fabric modernised—is ded. to St Cyr. Patron, the king. The Frome and the Stroud-water canal passes through this parish. Limestone is abundant, and there is a mineral spring, over which a house has been erected, but it has not yet become a very general resort for invalids. There are two free schools in the parish, with an endowment between them of £47 per annum. In that at Stonehouse, 28 children attend, and in that which is in the village of Ebbley, 16. Distance from Stroud, 4 m. W. Pop., in 1801, 1412; in 1831, 2469. A. P., £6,827.

STONEHOUSE (EAST), a parish in the suburbs of the borough of Plymouth, hundred of Roborough, co. of Devon. Living, a curacy in the archd. of Totness and dio. of Exeter, certified at £8 14s. 4d. Church ded. to St George. Patron, the vicar of St Andrew's, Plymouth. This parish derives its name from Joel de Stonehouse, who was proprietor thereof in the reign of Henry III. Prior to that period it was called Hipperston. Originally it stood more to the south, but as it was extended northward, the more southern portions were allowed to fall into decay. It consists of several handsome streets well-paved and lighted with gas. It is supplied with water brought in pipes from the reservoir of the Devonport water company, in the parish of Stoke-Damerell, and from a fine stream brought into the town in the reign of Queen Elizabeth. A stone bridge, carried over Stonehouse creek, at the joint expense of the earl of Mount Edgcombe and Sir John St Aubyn, gives an easy communication with Devonport, and a little higher up the creek to the north, a mill-dam affords a passage to Stoke. On what is called the Devil's-Point, is the picturesque ruin of a block house, erected in the time of Elizabeth. Above it has been erected a modern battery, which is occupied by a party of marine artillery. At a short distance is Eastern King's battery, which commands the mouth of the Hamoaze. The creek is also protected by a fort. In addition to the general business of the town arising from its maritime relations, are some extensive manufactories of soap and candles; a customary market is held on Wednesdays, and there are fairs the first Wednesday in May, and the second Wednesday in September. The town is within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, who hold their sessions in the court-hall at Devonport. A manorial court leet and baron is held annually. The royal naval hospital for the reception of wounded seamen and marines, is perhaps the most important of its public establishments. It comprises ten buildings, each containing six wards, each ward having accommodation for 20 patients, with a chapel, store-room, operating-room, small-pox ward, and dispensary. The whole forms an extensive quadrangle, ornamented on three sides with a piazza, and occupying an area of 24 acres of ground. The royal marine barracks, on the west shore of Mill-bay, comprise also a handsome range of buildings, forming an oblong square, and having accommodation for 1000 men. The Long Room barracks are built of wood, and will accommodate 900 men. The New victualling establishment is upon a very large scale, but not yet completed. The Baptists, the Independents, the Wesleyan Methodists, and the Roman Catholics, have all places of worship here, and a national school is supported by voluntary contributions. Distance from Plymouth, $1\frac{1}{2}$ m. W.S.W. Pop., in 1801, 3407; in 1831, 9571. A. P., £17,909.

STONELEIGH, a parish in Kenilworth division of the hundred of Knightlow, co. of Warwick. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Coventry and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, rated at £6 15s. 5d. The church—which is ancient, having a tower clothed with ivy—is ded. to St Mary. Patron, the lord-chancellor. This parish is watered by the Avon and the Sow, the former crossed by a good substantial stone bridge, the latter by a very old one of eight arches. Stoneleigh-Abbey is situated near the Avon, is remarkable for its extensive park well-stocked with deer, and a profusion of very fine trees. The free school here educates 70 boys and 50 girls. It has an endowment of £100 per annum. Distance from Coventry, $4\frac{1}{2}$ m. S.S.W. Pop., in 1801, 1347; in 1831, 1298. A. P., £15,945.

STONER, a hamlet in the parish of Watlington, hundred of Perton, co. of Oxford, 4 m. N.W. from Henley-upon-Thames. Pop. with the parish.

STORTFORD-BISHOP, a parish and market-town in the hundred of Braughin, co. of Hertford. Living, a vicarage in the jurisdiction of the commissary of Essex and Herts, concurrently with the consistorial court of the bishop of London, rated at £12. The church—an elegant and spacious structure, having a tower surmounted by a lofty spire—is ded. to St Michael. Patron, the precentor of St Paul's cathedral. The town is situated in a fertile valley on the banks of the river Stort. It occupies two gentle acclivities, and consists principally of four streets, in the form of a cross, of which Wendhill is the western, and Hockerhill the eastern extremity. Spring-water is abundant. The trade of the town is confined chiefly to grain and malt, for the conveyance of which, the river, which is navigable, and a canal, afford every facility. A silk mill gives employment to a few of the inhabitants. The market-day is Thursday. A market-house has been recently erected. It is built in the Ionic order, having a semicircular area, with a colonnade supported upon iron pillars. The first floor contains an assembly-room, coffee-room, magistrates' room, &c.; underneath is a spacious hall, which serves as the corn-exchange. At the southern extremity is the fish, flesh, and poultry markets. Fairs are held on Holy Thursday, the Thursday after Trinity-Sunday, and on the 11th of October. The town is within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, who hold a petty session in the corn-exchange once a month.

Here was a castle erected by William the Conqueror, who bestowed it, with the town, upon Maurice, bishop of London, and his successors. In the reign of Stephen, the Empress Matilda attempted to negotiate an exchange with the bishop, which, not succeeding, she threatened to demolish the castle. It remained, however, till the reign of John, who, exasperated at the promulgation by the bishop of the pope's threat of excommunication, razed it to the ground, took the town into his own hands, incorporating the inhabitants, and bestowing upon them special privileges, which they continued to enjoy till the time of Edward III. During the reign of Mary, the bigotted Bishop Bonner exercised his despotic authority here, in imprisoning a number of worthy men who could not submit to the dogmas of superstition. One of them he had burnt on an adjoining field called Goose-Green. There are, besides the established church, places of worship for the Society of Friends, the Independents, and the Methodists. There is a free grammar school, to which was attached an excellent library. This school at one time was highly celebrated, but has greatly declined. A national school is supported by subscription. There are several almshouses and bequests to the amount of £200 per annum, applied to various charitable purposes. Near the remains of the ancient castle is a well dedicated to St Oryth, the water of which is reckoned medicinal in disorders of the eyes. Hoole, the translator of Tasso, was a native of this town. Distance from Hertford, 14 m. E.N.E.; from London, 30 N.E. Pop., in 1801, 2305; in 1831, 3958. A. P., £8,930.

STORWOOD, a township in the parish of Thornton, E. R., co. of York, 8½ m. S.S.W. from Pocklington. Pop., in 1801, 86; in 1831, 119. A. P., £1,209.

STOTFOLD, a parish in the hundred of Clifton, co. of Bedford. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Bedford and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £5 17s. 1d., returned at £92 19s. 4d. Church ded. to St Mary. Patrons, the master and fellows of Trinity college, Cambridge. Here is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Distance from Buldock, 2½ m. N.W. Pop., in 1801, 495; in 1831, 833. A. P., £2,096.

STOTFORD, a township in the parish of Hooton-Pagnell, W. R., co. of York, 7 m. N.W. from Doncaster. Pop., in 1801, 8; in 1831, 9. A. P., £276.

STOTTESDEN, a hundred in the co. of Salop. It lies in the south-east corner of the county, bordering on the south with Worcestershire, and on the east with Staffordshire. It comprises 33 parishes. Pop., in 1801, 11,919.

STOTTESDEN, a parish in the hundred of Stottesden, co. of Salop. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Hereford, rated at £5 10s. 10d. Church ded. to St Mary. Patron, Sir William Pulteney. Distance from Cleabury-Mortimer, 5 m. N. Pop., in 1801, with the chapelry of Farlow, 1716; in 1831, 1579. A. P., £1,415.

STOUGHTON, a chapelry in the parish of Thurnby, hundred of Gartree, co. of Leicester. Living, a curacy to the vicarage of Thurnby, in the archd. of Leicester and dio. of Lincoln, not in charge. Chapel ded. to St Mary. Patron, the vicar of Thurnby. Distance from Leicester, 4 m. E.S.E. Pop., in 1801, 158; in 1831, 139. A. P., £2,850.

STOUGHTON, a parish in the hundred of West-Bourne and Singleton, rape of Chichester, co. of Sussex. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Chichester, rated at £8 10s. The church—built in the early style of English architecture—is ded. to St Mary. Patron, the bishop of Chichester. Distance from Chichester, 6 m. N.W. Pop., in 1801, 502; in 1831, 570. A. P., £2,821.

STOULTON, a parish in the lower division of the hundred of Oswaldslow, co. of Worcester. Living, a curacy to the rectory of Kempsey, in the archd. and dio. of Worcester, rated at £4 1s. 8d., returned at £60. Church ded. to St Edmund. Patron, in 1829, Earl Somers. Distance from Pershore, 4½ m. N.W. Pop., in 1801, 301; in 1831, 312. A. P., £2,843.

STOWERPAINE, a parish in the hundred of Pimperne, Blandford division, co. of Dorset. Living a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, rated at £7 18s. 6½d., returned at £87 19s. 3d. Church ded. to the Holy Trinity. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Salisbury. This parish lies along the river Stour, and has the remains of a Danish camp on an eminence at a short distance from the river. Distance from Blandford-Forum, 3 m. N.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 380; in 1831, 594. A. P., £1,141.

STOURBRIDGE, a market-town in the parish of Old-Swineford, co. of Worcester. It derives its name from its situation on the Stour, over which it has an excellent bridge, which connects Worcestershire with Staffordshire. The streets are very irregularly built, but the appearance of the whole is good. The market-house is spacious and handsome, and the theatre, though small, is remarkably neat. The surrounding country abounds with coal and ironstone, the mines of which appear to have been worked so early as the reign of Edward III. The principal branches of trade and manufacture are those of glass, which was established here in 1557, iron, and fire-bricks. The former of these is carried on to a great extent, there being no less than 12 houses in the immediate neighbourhood in which the different varieties of flint, crown, bottle, and window glass are manufactured, with several cutting mills. The plentiful supply of fuel contributes to the successful prosecution of this manufacture; and the abundance, in the immediate neighbourhood, of that superior species of clay which is used for glass-house pots, perhaps still more so. This clay is admirably adapted for crucibles and for fire-bricks, and being found in large quantities, is exported under the name of Stourbridge fire-clay. It is found in strata of three or four feet thick, at about 150 feet below the surface of the ground. The manufactories of iron are also carried on upon a large scale. That of Bradley covers four acres of ground, and employs 1000 workmen. Almost every article of cast and wrought iron is manufactured here. In the making of nails alone, some thousands of men, women, and children, are employed. A canal, running from the town to the Staffordshire and Worcester canal, connects it with the Severn, and with that line of inland navigation which extends over the mining and manufacturing districts, and affords a ready transit of goods to every market of any note in the kingdom. The market-day is Friday, and a market-house has recently been erected at the expense of £15,000. It is built of brick, but the principal front towards the High-street is stuccoed in the Doric order of architecture. Part of the front is occupied by shops. Fairs are held March 29th and September 8th. The former lasts for seven days. It is chiefly for horses. A court of requests is held here for the recovery of small debts, the entire parish of Old-Swinford being subject to its jurisdiction.

Stourbridge has an episcopal chapel erected about a century ago by subscriptions raised among the inhabitants, under the authority of an act of parliament. It is a brick edifice, with a square tower, and is not within the jurisdiction of the bishop. It is ded. to St Thomas. The inhabitants choose the minister. There are also chapels for the Society of Friends, Independents, Methodists, Presbyterians, and Roman Catholics. There is a free grammar school liberally endowed. The head master has a salary of £150 per annum, and the second master £90 per annum: whatever is over of the endowment, after deducting for the repairs of the school, is divided between them. Dr Johnson received the rudiments of his education at this school. A national school has been erected by voluntary contribution. It is attended by nearly 300 children. Distance from Worcester, 21 m. N.E.; from London, 124 m. N.W. Pop., in 1801, 3431; in 1831, 6148. A. P., £5,974.

STOURMOUTH, a parish in the hundred of Bleangate, lathe of St Augustine, co. of Kent. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury, rated at £19. Church ded. to All Saints. Patron, the bishop of Rochester. The Stour, which is here navigable, intersects the parish. Distance from Canterbury, 2 m. N.N.E. Pop., in 1801, 202; in 1831, 257. A. P., £2,146.

STOURPORT, a market town in the parish of Mitton, co. of Worcester, situated at the confluence of the rivers Severn and Stour, and on the basin of the Staffordshire canal, where it falls into the Severn, forming by these means a centre of communication with all the adjoining districts, as well as with the most distant parts of the kingdom. Prior to the formation of the Staffordshire and Worcester canal, the town consisted only of a few paltry cottages. It is now a neat, well built town, though mostly of brick. The principal streets are paved, and partially lighted with gas. Its principal trade is the transmission of goods by the canal, which to many of the inhabitants forms a lucrative employment. The building of boats and canal barges is also prosecuted to a considerable extent. The market, which is becoming of considerable importance as a corn market, is held on Wednesday. The tolls are uplifted by certain proprietors who purchased the ground and erected the market house. There are three fairs annually, March 31st, September 15th, and December 18th. Though situated in the heart of the country, seen from any of the neighbouring heights, with its warehouses, wharfs, and forest of masts, it presents the aspect of a large maritime town. A bridge of stone over the Severn having been swept away by a heavy flood, it has been replaced by a beautiful iron one, consisting of a single arch 150 feet in span and 50 in perpendicular height above the surface of the water. There is no place of worship here belonging to the established church; the inhabitants attend divine worship at the chapel of Mitton. The Wesleyan Methodists have a chapel here, and Sabbath schools are in extensive operation. Distance from Kidderminster, 4 m. S.S.W.; from London, 130 m. W.N.W. Pop. returned with Mitton.

STOURTON, a hamlet in the parish of Whichford, co. of Warwick, 4 m. S.E. from Shipston-upon-Stow. Pop., in 1801, 201; in 1831, 197. A. P., £1,634.

STOURTON, a parish partly in the hundred of Norton-Ferris, co. of Somerset, but chiefly in the hundred of Mere, co. of Wilts. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Salisbury, rated at £17. Church ded. to St Peter. Patron, in 1829, Sir R. C. Hoare, Bart. The church is a small edifice in the pointed style of the fourteenth century, having a square embattled tower at the west end, supported by angular buttresses, and containing many ancient monuments. An elegant mansion of Italian architecture has been built on the site of the old castle of Stourton, by the Hoare family, the present proprietors of the estate, and on the highest elevation in this demeane a lofty tower has been erected in honour of Alfred, who, on issuing from his retreat in the isle of Athelney, is said to have fixed his standard here, hence called Kingsettle-hill. Under a statue of the monarch is the following inscription, "Alfred the Great, A.D. 879, on this summit erected his standard against the Danish invaders. To him we owe the institution of juries and the creation of a naval force. Alfred, the light of a benighted age, was a philosopher and a Christian, the father of his people, and the founder of the English monarchy and liberties." Here, in 656, the Britons sustained a severe defeat, and were driven as far as Petherton on the Parrot, by Cenwallus, king of Wessex. On the same spot, in 1001, the Saxons were overthrown by the Danes, who in their turn, fifteen years after, were defeated by Edmund on the same blood-stained field. The southern extremity of the parish is a boggy tract, and exhibits a great number of those singular excavations known in the neighbourhood by the name of Pen pits. They are of various forms and dimensions, and are scattered over an extent of about 700 acres. Stourton gives the title of baron to the family of Stourton. Distance from Mere, 2½ m. W.N.W. Pop., in 1801, of that part of the parish which is in Somersetshire, 343; in that part which lies in Wiltshire, 306; in all, 649: in 1831, of the former, 303; in the latter, 350; in all, 653. A. P., of the Somersetshire portion, £1,160; of the Wiltshire division, £2,661; total, £3,821.

STOUTING, a hundred in the co. of Kent. It lies in the lathe of Shepway, south-east part of the county, and comprises 5 parishes. Pop., in 1831, 14,000.

STOUTING, a parish in the hundred of Stouting, lath of Shepway, co. of Kent. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury, rated at £7 17s. 11d. Church ded. to St Mary. Patron, in 1829, the Rev. Dr Wrench. The Roman Stane-street bounds this parish on the east. A branch of the Stour also rises here. Distance from Ashford, 8 m. E.S. E. Pop., in 1801, 186; in 1831, 254. A. P., £1,012.

STOVEN, a parish in the hundred of Blything, co. of Suffolk. Living, a curacy in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich, certified at £6 10s. Church ded. to St Margaret. Patron, in 1829, the Rev. N. T. O. Leman. The church has a Norman arch which is greatly admired. Distance from Halesworth, 5 m. E.N.E. Pop., in 1801, 125; in 1831, 112. A. P., £768.

STOW, a hamlet in the parish of Threckingham, co. of Lincoln, 2½ m. N.E.E. from Folkingham. Pop. with the parish.

STOW, a parish in the wapentake of Well, parts of Lindsey, co. of Lincoln. The livings are a prebend and a curacy, in the archd. of Stow and dio. of Lincoln, the former rated at £10 19s. 2d., the latter certified at £46 10s., returned at £50. Church ded. to St Mary. Patrons, the prebendary of Corringham and of Stow, alternately, in the cathedral of Lincoln. "Here was a church, or minster, for secular priests, built to the honour of the Blessed Virgin Mary by Eadnoth, bishop of Dorchester, and much augmented by the benefactions of Earl Leofric, and his lady, Godiva. After the Conquest, the religious here were changed into Benedictine monks under the government of an abbot, by Bishop Remigius, who got for them, of William Rufus, the then desolate abbey of Eynsham in Oxfordshire, whither his successor, Robert Bloet, removed this abbot and his monks, reserving Stow, Newark, and some other estates, to the see of Lincoln, for which he gave them in exchange, Chorlebury, &c."—Tanner's Not. Mon. Courts leet and baron are held here annually, and there is a fair for horses and cattle, October 10th. The Wesleyan Methodists have here a place of worship, and there is a school with a small endowment. Distance from Gainsborough, 8 m. S.E. Pop., in 1801, 951; in 1831, 808. A. P., £4,281.

STOW, a parish in the hundred of Purslow, co. of Salop. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Hereford, rated at £4 7s. 4d. Church ded. to St Michael. Patron, the king. The river Team intersects the parish. Distance from Knighton, 1½ m. N.E. Pop., in 1801, 133; in 1831, 147. A. P., £1,779.

STOW (LONG), a parish in the hundred of Longstow, co. of Cambridge. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Ely, rated at £4 8s. 4d. Patron, the Rev. W. Wright. The petty sessions are held here. "Walter, vicar of this place, founded here, temp. Henry III., or before, an hospital of poor sisters, which was dedicated to the Blessed Virgin."—Tanner's Not. Mon. Distance from Caxton, 3 m. S.S. E. Pop., in 1801, 175; in 1831, 231. A. P., £1,423.

STOW (LONG), a parish in the hundred of Leightonstone, co. of Huntingdon. Living, a curacy in the archd. of Huntingdon and dio. of Lincoln, certified at £16, returned at £40. Church ded. to St Botolph. Patron, the prebendary of Longstow in the cathedral church of Lincoln. Distance from Kimbolton, 2½ m. N. E. Pop., in 1801, 118; in 1831, 180. A. P., £1,340.

STOW WITH QUY, a parish in the hundred of Staine, co. of Cambridge. Living, a vicarage with the curacy of Quy, in the archd. and dio. of Ely, certified at £37 17s. 6d., returned at £32. Church ded. to St Mary. Patron, the bishop of Ely. The celebrated nonjuror, Jeremy Collier, was born here, 1650. Distance from Cambridge, 5 m. N.E. Pop., in 1801, 235; in 1831, 400. A. P., £1,421.

STOW-LANGTOFT, a parish in the hundred of Blackburn, co. of Suffolk. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich, rated at £8 7s. 8½d. Church ded. to St George. Patron, in 1829, S. W. Rawlinson, Knight. Distance from Bury-St-Edmunds, 8 m. E.N.E. Pop., in 1801, 162; in 1831, 204. A. P., £1,034.

STOW-MARKET, a market town and parish in the hundred of Stow, co. of Suffolk. Living, a discharged vicarage with that of Stow-Upland, in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich, rated at £16 15s. The church—a beautiful structure, having a square tower surmounted by an elegant wooden spire 120 feet high—is ded. to St Mary and St Peter. Patron, in 1829, the Rev. J. Wilcox. Stow-Market is situated at the confluence of three rivulets, which united, form the water of Gippen, on the high road from Ipswich to Bury and Cambridge. It is the most central town in the county. It consists of a number of streets, for the greater part regularly built and paved. Many of the houses are handsome, those near the market place especially, and there is an abundant supply of water. The situation of the place is highly favourable to its commercial interests, and these have been greatly promoted by the navigation of the Gippen, that stream having been deepened as far as Ipswich, which by the Orwell communicates with the sea at Harwich. The principal trade carried on is the making of malt, there being upwards of twenty malting houses in the town. There are also small manufactories of rope, twine, and sack. There is a considerable tannery at Combs, and there is an iron foundry in the town. By the navigation to Ipswich, grain and malt are conveyed thither, the returns being timber, deals, coal, and slate, for the supply of the central parts of the county. The market is on Thursday, and there are fairs August 12th for cattle, July 10th for amusement, and in September for hops, cheese, cattle, &c. This town is one of the polling places for the members for the western division of the co. A manorial court baron is held annually, and a petty session every alternate Monday. There are, besides the established church, places of worship for the Baptists and Independents. There are some small benefactions for teaching poor children. A national school, and two Sabbath schools, are supported by subscription. There are also several benevolent institutions for the support of the poor. Abbotshall here, now the seat of J. Rust, Esq. was formerly a cell to the abbey of St Oeyth, co. of Essex. The preceptor of the author of "Paradise Lost," Dr Young, was vicar of this parish from 1630 to 1655. Distance from Ipswich, 12 m. N.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 1761; in 1831, 2672. A. P., £6,043.

STOW-BARDOLPH, a parish in the hundred of Clackclose, co. of Norfolk. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich, rated at £6 6s. 8d. Church ded. to the Holy Trinity. Patron, the rector of Wimbotsam. Here was an ancient hermitage, now converted into a farm house. A fair is held Saturday after Whitsunday, at the bridge across the Ouse, about two miles from the village, for horses, cattle, and pedlery. Distance from Downham-Market, 2 m. N.N.E. Pop., in 1801, 576; in 1831, 760. A. P., £3,892.

STOW-BEDON, a parish in the hundred of Wayland, co. of Norfolk. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Norwich, rated at £4 19s. 4½d. Church ded. to St Botolph. Patron, in 1829, the Rev. John Eade. The church here was anciently appropriated to Marsham abbey, and had a guild founded in honour of the Virgin Mary. Distances from Walton, 4 m. S.S.E. Pop., in 1801, 217; in 1831, 303. A. P., £1,839.

STOW-UPLAND, a parish in the hundred of Stow, co. of Suffolk. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich, not in charge. Patron, the vicar of Stow-Market, to which it lies adjacent. Pop., in 1801, 709; in 1831, 826. A. P., £3,775.

STOW (Westr), a parish in the hundred of Blackbourn, co. of Suffolk. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich, rated at £9 17s. 3½d. Church ded. to St Mary. Patron, in 1829, R. D. Beauvoir. Distance from Bury-St-Edmunds, 5 m. N.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 168; in 1831, 266. A. P., £1,156.

STOW-MARIES, a parish in the hundred of Dengie, co. of Essex. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Essex and dio. of London, rated at £18 6s. 8d. Church ded. to St Mary and St Margaret. Patron, in 1829, the Rev. G. H. Storie. The Crouch forms the boundary of this parish on the south. Distance from Maldon, 5½ m. W.S.W. Pop., in 1801, 168; in 1831, 242. A. P., £2,825.

STOW-ON-THE-WOLD, a market town and parish in the upper division of the vale of Slaughter, co. of Gloucester. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester, rated at £18. The church—a spacious edifice, the tower of which is conspicuous at a great distance—is ded. to St Edward. Patron, in 1829, the Rev. Edward Hipplesey. This little town, as its name indicates, is situated on the summit of a hill in a very bleak and barren part of the county. The houses in general are of stone, but low, irregularly built, and, upon the whole, present, though an antiquated, a very mean appearance. It is very indifferently paved, and water and fuel are so scarce, that it has often been remarked the town possesses only one element, viz. air. Shoes were long the only article manufactured here, but there is now a small branch of the clothing trade carried on, though upon a very limited scale. A sanguinary battle was fought here during the parliamentary war, in which the royalists were defeated. The Baptists have here a place of worship, and there is a school on the national plan supported by subscription. On the south side of the churchyard there are almshouses for nine poor persons. The Foss-way intersects the town and the north part of the parish. Distance from Gloucester, 25 m. E. by E. Pop., in 1801, 1471; in 1831, 1810. A. P., £4,867.

STOW-WOOD, a parish in the hundred of Bullington, co. of Oxford, 4 m. N. from Oxford. There is no church here. Pop., in 1801, 33; in 1831, 26. A. P., £672.

STOWE, a parish in the hundred of Buckingham, co. of Buckingham. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Buckingham and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £11 14s. 7d. Church ded. to St Mary. Patron, the duke of Buckingham. This parish is chiefly remarkable for the splendid mansion, the seat of the duke of Buckingham and Chandos, formerly the property of Earl Temple. Of this superb edifice the principal apartments are the saloon, an oval 60 feet by 40, surrounded with Scagliola columns surmounted by a magnificent frieze in alto relievo representing the procession of a Roman triumph and sacrifice. The floor is of white Carrara marble cut into four feet squares. An entrance hall, an Egyptian hall, a music room, two libraries, containing 20,000 volumes of printed books in all departments of literature, and one of the most extensive collections of prints in Europe, including an unrivalled series of portraits illustrative of English history; a chapel, wainscoted throughout with cedar, and richly carved. The library of MSS. is in the Gothic style, and contains upwards of 2000 volumes, including Norman charters, Irish MSS., &c. In this room are some fine old chairs carved in ebony and ivory, some of them formerly the property of Cardinal Wolsey, others that of Rubens. The apartments are furnished with a profusion of paintings by the best masters. The gardens, comprising an extent of 500 acres, present a rich variety of surface and scenery. Here are temples to Concord, to Victory, to Friendship, to Venus, to the British worthies, to ancient Virtue, &c. Among other towers, here is the Bourbon tower, so called from some trees that have been planted around it by Lewis XVIII. and his family, for a memorial of their gratitude for the princely hospitality shown them here while in exile. In the flower gardens are an orangery, a conservatory, and a building which contains a museum of natural history. The entire mineralogical and geological collections of Haüy are here preserved, with an immense number of specimens collected by the duke of Buckingham. Distance from Buckingham, 2½ m. N.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 311; in 1831, 490. A. P., £4,113.

STOWE, a parish in the south division of the hundred of Pirehill, co. of Stafford. Living, a curacy in the archd. of Stafford and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, certified at £4 13s. 4d., returned at £52. Church ded. to St John the Baptist. Patron, in 1829, Mrs Brown. Here is a bequest of £15 left by a person unknown, which is appropriated to the educating of fourteen children. Distance from Stafford, 5½ m. E.N.E. Pop., in 1811, 853; in 1831, 1283. A. P., £8,523.

STOWE, a parish in the wapentake of Ness, parts of Kesteven, co. of Lincoln. Living, a vicarage with that of Barholme in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £4 3s. 9d. Church ded. to St John the Baptist. Patrons, the governors of Oakham and Uppingham schools. Distance from Market-Deeping, 3 m. W.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 24; in 1831, 25. A. P., £399.

STOWE-NINE-CHURCHES, a parish in the hundred of Fawsley, co. of Northampton. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough, rated at £18. The church—which contains a magnificent monument to the memory of Elizabeth, fourth daughter of John, Lord Latimer—is ded. to St Michael. Patron, in 1829, the Rev. J. L. Crawley. The Grand Junction canal passes through this parish, and the ancient Watling-street forms its boundary to the east. Distance from Daventry, 5½ m. S.E. Pop., in 1801, 311; in 1831, 404. A. P., £3,103.

STOWEL, a parish in the hundred of Bradley, co. of Gloucester. Living, a discharged rectory annexed to that of Hampnett, in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester, rated at £5 17s. 1d. Church ded. to St Leonard. Distance from North-Leach, 2 m. W.S.W. Pop., in 1801, 13; in 1831, 43. A. P., £1,303.

STOWEL, a parish in the hundred of Horthorne, co. of Somerset. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Wells and dio. of Bath and Wells, rated at £6 15s., returned at £135 0s. 4d. Church ded. to St Mary Magdalene. Patron, in 1829, W. M. Doddington, Esq. Distance from Wincanton, 5 m. S.S.W. Pop., in 1801, 88; in 1831, 123. A. P., £1,412.

STOWELL, a tything in the parish of Overton, co. of Wilts, 6 m. S.S.W. from Marlborough. Pop. with the chapelry of Alton-Priors.

STOWER (EAST), a parish in the hundred of Redlane, Sturminster division of the co. of Dorset. Living, a curacy annexed to the vicarage of Gillingham, in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol. Church ded. to St Mary. Henry Fielding, author of Tom Jones, possessed an estate in this parish, where he resided at one period of his life. Distance from Shaftesbury, 4½ m. W. Pop., in 1801, 380; in 1831, 531. A. P., £2,614.

STOWER (WEST), a parish in the hundred of Redlane, Sturminster division of the co. of Dorset. Living, a curacy to the vicarage of Gillingham, in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol. Church ded. to St Mary. Distance from Shaftesbury, 5½ m. W. Pop., in 1801, 132; in 1831, 219. A. P., £1,910.

STOWER-PROVOST, a parish and liberty in the Sturminster division of the co. of Dorset. Living, a rectory, with that of Todbere annexed, in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, rated at £16 4s. 9½d. Church ded. to St Michael. Patrons, the provost and fellows of King's college, Cambridge. Here was a cell to the nunnery of St Leger de Pratellis, or Preaux. Its revenues were granted, first to Eton, afterwards to King's college, Cambridge. Distance from Shaftesbury, 4½ m. W.S.W. Pop., in 1801, 604; in 1831, 870. A. P., £4,079.

STOWERTON, a hamlet in the parish of Whichford, co. of Warwick, 4 m. S.E. from Shipton-upon-Stour. Pop., in 1801, 201; in 1831, 219. A. P., £1,634.

STOWEY, a parish in the hundred of Chew, co. of Somerset. Living, a discharged vicarage, a peculiar in the dio. of Bath and Wells. Church ded. to St Mary. Patron, the bishop of Bath and Wells. Here is a bequest of £3,000, the interest to be applied to the educating and apprenticing of poor children of the parishes of Stowey and Chew.

STOWEY (NETHER), a parish and market town in the hundred of Williton and Freemeners, co. of Somerset. Living, a vicarage and a peculiar in the dio. of Bath and Wells, rated at £5 2s. 8½d. Church ded. to St Mary. Patrons, the dean and canons of Windsor. This small town, situated on one of the tributary streams of the Parret, consists of three streets, nearly in the form of the letter Y. It is neither lighted nor paved, but it is very clean. It has at the intersection of the street a rudely constructed market house, where a market is held on the Saturdays, but from its proximity to Bridgewater very little business is transacted. A fair is held September 18th, for cattle. The silk manufacture is carried on here on a small scale. On a hill to the west of the town stood the castle of Stowey, of which the inhabitants anciently held their houses and lands by burgage. A church stood beside the castle, but no vestiges of either now remain, save the castle ditch. From the site of the castle a fine view is obtained of the Bristol channel and the Mendip hills. Courts leet and baron are held annually at Michaelmas, when constables and other officers are appointed. Here is a place of worship belonging to the Independents, and a school is supported by subscription. Distance from Bridgewater, 8 m. W.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 526; in 1831, 778. A. P., £3,837.

STOWEY (OVER), a parish in the hundred of Cannington, co. of Somerset. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Taunton and dio. of Bath and Wells, rated at £7 1s. 5½d. Church ded. to St Mary Magdalene. Patron, the bishop of Bath and Wells. There is a small silk manufactory in this parish. Distance from Bridgewater, 7 m. W.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 468; in 1831, 592. A. P., £1,125.

STOWFORD, a parish in the hundred of Lifton, co. of Devon. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Totness and dio. of Exeter, rated at £11 12s. 6d. Patron, in 1829, J. D. Harris, Esq. There is a school here with a small endowment. Dr John Prineaux, author of the Connexions of Sacred and Profane History, was a native of this parish. Distance from Launceston, 8 m. E.N.E. Pop., in 1801, 235; in 1831, 463. A. P., £2,015.

STOWICK, a tything in the parish of Henbury, co. of Gloucester, 5 m. N.N.W. from Bristol. Pop., in 1801, 323; in 1831, 568. A. P. with the parish.

STRADBROOK, a parish in the hundred of Hoxne, co. of Suffolk. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich, rated at £9 18s. 6½d. Church ded. to All Saints. Patron, the bishop. Here is a place of worship for the Baptists, and several bequests for educating the children of the poor. Distance from Eye, 5½ m. E.S.E. Pop., in 1801, 1215; in 1831, 1527. A. P., £5,283.

STRADISHALL, a parish in the hundred of Risbridge, co. of Suffolk. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich, rated at £9 11s. 0½d. Church ded. to St Margaret. Patron, in 1829, John Vernon, Esq. Distance from Claro, 5 m. N.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 460; in 1831, 393. A. P., £5,283.

STRADSET, a parish in the hundred of Clackclose, co. of Norfolk. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich, rated at £3 6s. 8d., returned at £100. The church—in the east window of which, in richly stained glass, are the arms of the see of Ely, of the East-Angles, and of Bury and Durham abbeys—is ded. to St Mary. Distance from Downham-Market, 3¼ m. E.N.E. Pop., in 1801, 166; in 1831, 183. A. P., £1,509.

STRAFFORTH AND TICKHILL, a wapentake in the W. R. of the co. of York. It lies in the south end of the county, bordering with Lincolnshire and Nottinghamshire on the east, and with Derbyshire on the south and west. It comprises 57 parishes, including four market-towns, 53 townships, and eight chapelries. Pop., in 1831, 159,980.

STRAGGLESTHORPE, a parish in the wapentake of Loveden, parts of Kesteven, co. of Lincoln. Living, a curacy to the rectory of Beckingham, in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln, not in charge. Church ded. to St Michael. Patron, the rector of Beckingham. Distance from Newark, 8 m. E.S.E. Pop., in 1801, 79; in 1831, 82. A. P., £879.

STRAMSHALL, a township in the parish of Uttoxeter. It is in the honour of Tutbury, and subject to a court of pleas held there every third Monday. "This seems to have been one of the places, near the wood of Arden, which King Egbert, or, as others say, King Ethelwulf, gave to St Modwenna, when she came out of Ireland in the beginning of the ninth century, and where she built a monastery, and presided in it herself as abbess for several years."—Tanner's Not. Mon. Distance from Uttoxeter, 1½ m. N.N.W. Pop. with the parish.

STRANGHOW, a township in the parish of Skelton, N. R. co. of York, 4½ m. E. from Guilsborough. Pop., in 1801, 118; in 1831, 132. A. P., not returned separately.

STRANTON, a parish and township in the north-east division of Stockton ward, co.-palatine of Durham. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Durham, rated at £17 16s. 0½d. The church—which exhibits various styles of architecture—is ded. to All Saints. Patron, Sir W. Ridley, Bart. In this parish are extensive lime-works. The village stands on the south side of Hartlepool harbour. In draining a morass here, an immense quantity of human bones were discovered, supposed to have been those of the Scots who fell at the siege of Hartlepool in 1644. A school is kept up here by subscription. Distance from Stockton-upon-Tees, 10½ m. N.N.E. Pop., in 1801, of the township, 325; of the entire parish, 610; in 1831, of the former, 381; of the latter, 736. A. P., of the township, £1,547; of the entire parish, £3,073.

STRATA-FLORIDA, or CARON-UWCH-CLAWDD, a chapelry in the parish of Tref-Garon, or Isclawdd, co. of Cardigan, South Wales. Living, a chapelry to the parish of Caron-Uwch-Clawdd, in the dio. of St David's, not in charge, certified at £8, returned at £72 5s. 8d. Patron the Nant-Eos family. The famous abbey of Strata-Florida, founded for Cistercian monks by Rys-ap-Gryffyd, prince of South Wales, A. D., 1164, stands in a sequestered glen, embraced by a semicircular chain of mountains, a heap of ruins. During the wars with Edward I. it was burned down, but afterwards restored to more than its original splendour. It flourished till the dissolution, when it shared the fate of the other religious houses, and is now in total ruin. Here were kept the records of the principality, from the year 1157 till the final overthrow of Llewellyn, the last reigning prince, and its spacious cemetery was the depository of the mortal remains of many of the Cambrian princes. The abbey-house, which appears to have been a splendid edifice, is now, what remains of it, converted into a farm-house, and a handsome mansion has been built out of the ruins of the abbey. Distance from Tref-Garron, 4 m. N.E. Pop., in 1801, 523; in 1831, 732. A. P. with the parish.

STRATFIELD-MORTIMER, a parish in the hundred of Thesale, co. of Berks. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Berks and dio. of Salisbury, rated at £8 19s. 4½d., returned at £110. Church—in one of the windows of which is a portrait of William of Wykeham—ded. to St Mary. Patron, the master and fellows of Eton college. Distance from Reading, 7 m. S.S.W. Pop., in 1801, 694; in 1831, 860. A. P., £3,894.

STRATFIELD-SAYE, a parish, partly in the hundred of Reading, co. of Berks, but chiefly in the hundred of Holdshot, Basingstoke division of the co. of Southampton. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Winchester, rated at £24 18s. Church ded. to St Mary. Patron, the duke of Wellington. "About the year of our Lord, 1170, Nicolas de Stotewile founded the abbey of Vallement, or de Valido Monte, in Normandy, to which, among many other endowments, he gave the church of Stratfield, and a solitary place near it, ded. to St Leonard, wherein were fixed a prior and some Benedictine monks of that foreign house, to look after their estates here in England. Upon the suppression of the alien priories, this was granted to Eton college, 1^o of Edward IV." Tanner's Not. Mon. Here is the magnificent seat bestowed by act of parliament upon the duke of Wellington, for his splendid services in the late war against Napoleon Buonaparte. A school is also endowed with nearly £20 per annum, and there is a bequest of £5 per annum, for educating and clothing the children of the poor. Distance from Basingstoke, 7½ m. N.N.E. Pop., in 1801, 665; in 1831, 808. A. P., £5,782.

STRATFIELD-TURGIS, a parish in the hundred of Holdshot, Basingstoke division of the co. of Southampton. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Winchester, rated at £6 10s. 2½d. Church ded. to All Saints. Patron, in 1829, the duke of Wellington. Distance from Basingstoke, 6½ m. N.N.E. Pop., in 1801, 190; in 1831, 232. A. P., £1,267.

STRATFORD, a hamlet in the parish of Sandy, co. of Bedford, 2 m. N. from Biggleswade. Pop. with the parish.

STRATFORD-ST-MARY, a parish in the hundred of Samford, co. of Suffolk. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich, rated at £13. Church ded. to St Mary. Patron, the chancellor of the duchy of Lancaster. Here are the remains of a Roman camp. Distance from Dedham, 1½ m. N.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 502; in 1831, 630. A. P., £2,650.

STRATFORD-ST-ANDREW, a parish in the hundred of Pomesgate, co. of Suffolk. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich, rated at £5. Patron, the chancellor of the duchy of Lancaster. Distance from Saxmundham, 8 m. S.W. Pop., in 1801, 203; in 1831, 200. A. P., £2,650.

STRATFORD-UPON-AVON,

A market-town and parish in Stratford division of the hundred of Barlichway, co. of Warwick. Living, a discharged vicarage, a peculiar, in the dio. of Worcester, rated at £20. The church—which is very ancient, cruciform, and formerly collegiate—is ded. to the Holy Trinity. Patrons, in 1829, the earl of Plymouth, and the earl of Delaware.

Description.—The town is delightfully situated on an eminence, rising gently from the west bank of the Avon, which flows round its base in a somewhat expanding channel. The entrance by the London road is over a handsome stone bridge of fourteen arches, 76 yards in length, and defended on each side by a stone parapet, and having on the north side a foot-path with an iron palisade, supported by brackets of iron resting on the piers. This bridge was erected by Sir Hugh Clopton, in the reign of Henry VII., but widened in 1814. Running nearly parallel with this bridge is another of nine arches, built of brick, and exclusively used as a railroad to the wharfs at this end of the town. Over a branch of the river, diverted from the main stream, for the purpose of forming a mill-dam, is a bridge for foot passengers, formed of wood, laid upon stone piers. From the hill beyond this is obtained a most enchanting view of the town, and the finely wooded surrounding country. The town consists of a number of spacious streets intersecting each other, some of them at right angles and some of them more obliquely. In the old town—though their appearance in general has some thing of the antique—the houses are many of them commodious and well-built. Nor is it without modern buildings of large dimensions and tasteful decorations. In some of the streets are still to be seen the small houses of the olden time, of frame work, timber, and plaster. Among these, part of the ancient house in which Shakspeare was born, is still preserved, and is, to every person who has any thing like respect for genius, an object of deep interest. The house where he closed his days in dignified retirement, has been taken down by a late proprietor, who also cut down the mulberry tree planted by Shakspeare in the garden. The town-hall is a fine modern building of the Tuscan order, erected in 1768, and in the following year dedicated to the memory of the immortal bard, by David Garrick, who gave it the name of Shakspeare's Hall. He also presented the town with a grand statue of the poet, which is placed in a niche at the north end of the building. The theatre—built of brick, within the precincts of what was the poet's garden—is neat, and the internal arrangements and decorations are much admired. It is generally occupied for three months in the year. A public library and news-room are supported by subscription. The Shaksperian library is supported in the same manner, and promises to be a permanent and highly useful establishment. The trade of the town is not very extensive, it consists principally in corn and malt, which are sent to Birmingham and its environs. The Stratford canal, passing to the north of the town and communicating with the Birmingham, Warwick, and Oxford canals, connects them with the Avon, which is navigable for barges of 40 tons to Tewksbury, where it joins the Severn, thus affording a line of communication with the principal towns in the kingdom, and necessarily increasing the commerce of the place. The inhabitants, however, seem to be attached rather to the quiet pursuits of agriculture, than the agitating speculations of commerce. Enjoying a most salubrious atmosphere, surrounded on all sides with scenes of a finely diversified and highly interesting character; affording easy, inviting, and beautiful walks, enlivened by the elegant villas of respectable families, and the noble mansions of the wealthy, it has been considered by many families, whose aim is to enjoy rather than increase their incomes, as a most desirable place of residence. The market, formerly held on Thursday, is now by charter, granted the 59th of George III., held on Friday. It is considerable both for corn and cattle. Fairs, to which are attached courts of piepowder, are held May the 14th, and three following days, for horses, cattle, and toys, and September 25th for cattle, cheese, &c. Besides these there are great cattle-markets on the third Monday in February, the Friday following the 25th of March, the last Monday in July, the second Friday following the 25th of September, and on the second Monday in December. An area near the town-hall serves for the corn-market; a neat stuccoed building, erected near the site of the old cross, at the east end of Wood-street, surmounted by a cupola and vane, representing a falcon grasping a tilting spear,—Shakspeare's family crest—serves for the poultry market. The cattle-market is held in an open area, at the intersection of four of the principal streets.

Government, &c.—Stratford-upon-Avon was first incorporated in the reign of Edward VI., its privileges were extended by James I., and finally confirmed in the 26th of Charles II. By this last charter the government is vested in a mayor, a high-steward, a recorder, two chamberlains, twelve aldermen, and twelve burgesses, assisted by a steward of the borough-court, clerk of the peace, two sergeants-at-mace, and other officers. The mayor—who is also coroner and clerk of the market—is chosen by the aldermen and burgesses in council, annually, on the first Wednesday in September. The high-steward, recorder, and steward of the borough-court, are elected by the corporation, and hold their offices for life. The aldermen and the chamberlains are chosen from the common-council by the corporation. The mayor, the late mayor, the high-steward, the recorder, and the two senior aldermen are justices of the peace within the borough, and for part of the parish of Old Stratford, not otherwise within the borough. Quarterly courts of session for all offences not capital, and a court of record for the recovery of debts not exceeding £40, ought to be held by the corporation, but they have fallen nearly into disuse. The celebrity of Stratford-upon-Avon arises in a great measure from its having been the place where the highly gifted Shakspeare was born, and where he spent in tranquillity and comfort the short evening of his days. The house which he purchased for himself and in which he died, on his birthday, April 23d, 1616, remained in the possession of his descendants till the restoration, when it was re-purchased by one of the Clopton family, from which it had been bought by Shakspeare himself. By the executors of this Sir Hugh Clopton, it was sold to a clergyman of the name of Gostall, who cut down an admired mulberry tree which had been planted in the garden by the hand of Shakspeare himself, and because he was subjected to the assessment for the relief of the poor, he threw down the house and deserted the town, carrying along with him, no doubt, the execration of its inhabitants.

Benevolent Institutions, &c.—Here is a free grammar school, founded 1482, by Thomas Jolyffe, a native of the town, and one of the brethren of the ancient guild of the Holy Cross. At the dissolution the estate was seized upon by Henry VIII., but it was restored by Edward VI., to the corporation, for pious and charitable uses, who refounded the school, which is open to all the inhabitants of the town for gratuitous instruction in the classics, writing, and arithmetic. There are about fifteen scholars on the foundation. In this school Shakspeare received his education. A national school, in which are educated nearly 200 children of both sexes, is supported by subscription. A Lancasterian school is supported chiefly by the Independents. An infant school was sometime ago founded by Miss Mason, who erected a house for the purpose, capable of containing 200 children. Almshouses are endowed for 12 poor men and as many women, who have an allowance each of five shillings per week. Through the kindness of a few families, especially the Cloptons, a suit of clothes is added every other year. Near the hamlet of Bishopton is a saline spring, strongly impregnated with sulphur. The remains of ancient encampments, surrounded with numerous tumuli, are to be met with. Star stones are found in great profusion, and fine specimens of testaceous fossils. A large gold seal ring, with the initials W. S., was, in 1810, found near the churchyard. It had lain evidently many years, and is with great probability supposed to have been Shakspeare's signet. It is in the possession of Mr Wheler, the author of the history of Stratford. It is a singular fact that though the name of Shakspeare is associated with every recollection and every description of this borough, and though, as we have stated above, he closed his days in it with comfort and dignity, no traces of his handwriting, nor any thing known to have belonged to him, have ever been fully authenticated. Other great names, natives of Stratford, are, John de Stratford, lord-treasurer in the reign of Edward II., and lord-chancellor in the reign of Edward III., who promoted him to the see of Canterbury. Robert de Stratford, his brother, was archdeacon of Canterbury, and succeeded him as lord-chancellor. Ralph de Stratford, bishop of London during the great pestilence, 1348, purchased in Smithfield a burying place for the victims. John Huckell, author of a poem on the Avon, who aided Garrick in his Commemoration Ode, and other poetical addresses for the celebration of the jubilee, 1769. Francis Ainge, remarkable for a long life, was born here, 1629, left England when a young man and died in North America, April 18th, 1767, aged 137 years. Distance from Warwick, 8 m. S.W.; from London, 94 m. N.W. Pop., in 1801, 2418; in 1831, 3488. A. P., £4,836.

STRATFORD-LE-BOW, a parish in the Tower division of the hundred of Osulstone, co. of Middlesex. Living, a rectory in the peculiar jurisdiction of the commissary of London, concurrently with the consistorial court of the bishop, not in charge. The church, an ancient Gothic building, is ded. to St Mary. Patrons, the president and fellows of Brasenose college, Oxford. Formerly an extensive porcelain or china manufactory was carried on here. The woollen manufactory was also at one time prosperous here, the water of the Lea possessing peculiar qualities for dyeing scarlet. A nunnery, founded by Queen Maud, subsisted for a considerable time here, and it was famous for a fair called Bow fair, which from its vicinity to the metropolis, and the numerous doubtful characters which it there attracted, became at last such a nuisance that it was suppressed by the authority of the legislature. Distance from St Paul's cathedral, London, $4\frac{1}{2}$ m. E.N.E. Pop., in 1801, 2101; in 1831, 3371. A. P., £14,033.

STRATFORD-UNDER-THE-CASTLE, a parish in the hundred of Underditch, co. of Wilts. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Salisbury, not in charge, returned at £80. Church ded. to St Lawrence. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Salisbury. The so much talked of borough of Old Sarum is in this parish, and under an old tree near the church the members were formerly nominated. The great earl of Chatham was first sent into parliament for this borough, 1735. Distance from Salisbury, $1\frac{1}{2}$ m. N.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 352; in 1831, 374. A. P., £2,803.

STRATFORD-DEANS, a manor in the parish of Stratford-under-the-Castle, co. of Wilts. Living, a curacy, in the archd. and dio. of Salisbury, not in charge. Patron, the archdeacon of Salisbury. Distance from Salisbury, 2 m. N.N.W. Pop. with the parish.

STRATFORD (FENNY), a market-town and chapelry, partly in the parish of Blechley, and partly in that of Simpson, hundred of Newport, co. of Buckingham. Living, a curacy, in the archd. of Buckingham and dio. of Lincoln, returned at £105. Chapel ded. to St Martin. Patron, in 1829, John Willis, Esq. The town, which is situated on an eminence, takes its distinguishing appellation from the nature of the surrounding soil. It consists of two streets, the one lying along the main road, and the other on the cross road leading to Aylesbury. The inhabitants derive their support in a great measure from travellers passing through the town. The principal manufacture is lace. By a new road the south-east entrance into the town has been greatly improved, and the proximity of the Grand Junction canal affords considerable facilities for trade. In 1665 this town was nearly depopulated by the plague. The inns were all shut up, and the road, for some time, entirely deserted; nor has its market, which is held on Monday, ever had any prosperity since. It has fairs, April 19th, July 18th, October 10th, and November 28th. The Baptists have here a place of worship, and the Wesleyan Methodists. A school upon the national plan is supported by subscription. Distance from Buckingham, $13\frac{1}{2}$ m. E.; from London, 45 m. N.W. Pop., in 1801, 1653; in 1831, 1619. A. P., £2,088.

STRATFORD-LANGTHORNE, a ward in the parish of Westham, co. of Essex. The village stands along the high road to Harwich, is lighted with gas by the trustees upon the road, and supplied with water from the East London water works. The printing of calico and dyeing of silk is extensively carried on here. There are also two large chemical establishments, and a porter brewery, on the Lea, which is navigable into the Thames. It has places of worship for the Independents, the Wesleyan Methodists, and the Roman Catholics. A charity school for clothing and educating 30 girls is supported by voluntary contributions, and the work of the children. Here is also a bequest of £5 per annum, for apprenticing one poor boy. Here was a Cistercian abbey, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin Mary and All Saints, the revenues of which at the dissolution amounted to £573 15s. 6d. Distance from London, 4 m. E.N.E. A. P. with the parish.

STRATFORD (OLD), a hamlet in the parishes of Cosgrove, Fortho, Passenham, and Potterspury, $\frac{1}{2}$ of a mile N.W. from Stoney-Stratford. Here, there formerly stood a hermitage and a free chapel. Pop. returned with the different parishes.

STRATFORD (OLD), a parish in the Stratford division of the hundred of Barlichway, co. of Warwick. Living, a discharged rectory in the peculiar jurisdiction of the rector of Stratford-upon-Avon, rated at £20. Church ded. to the Holy Trinity. Patron, in 1829, the earl of Plymouth. Distance from Warwick, 8 m. S.W. Pop., in 1801, exclusive of Stratford-upon-Avon, 512; in 1831, 1673. A. P., £12,146.

STRATFORD (STONE), a market-town, comprising the united parishes of West Side and East Side, in the hundred of Newport, co. of Buckingham. Living, a curacy in the archd. of Buckingham and dio. of Lincoln, certified at £40 5s. The church, formerly a chantry, is ded. to St Giles. Stratford-Stoney is situated on the banks of the Ouse, over which is a stone bridge leading to Old Stratford, in the county of Northampton. It is supposed to have been the Lactodorum of the Itinerary, from the derivation of that ward which signifies a river forded by a causeway. The town is built on the Roman road called Watling-street, extending about a mile on each side of the road. The houses are built of freestone, some of them excellent and elegant, and the streets are partially paved, but not lighted; water is plentiful. The manufacture of lace is carried on to some extent, and the traffic is considerable; but the prosperity of the town seems to depend principally on its being a great thoroughfare for travellers. The market, which is well-frequented, is held on Friday; and there are fairs, August 2d, the Friday following the 10th of October, and on the 12th of November. The first and the last are for cattle, the second for hiring servants. In the early part of the last century the town was twice nearly destroyed by fire. Besides the established church here are places of worship for the Baptists, the Independents, and the Wesleyan Methodists. A national school is supported by subscription, aided by a small endowment, and there is a bequest of £70 per annum, for apprenticing poor boys. Distance from Buckingham, 8 m. N.E.; from London, 52 m. N.W. Pop., in 1801, 1653; in 1831, 1619. A. P., £11,088.

STRATFORD-TONEY, a parish in the hundred of Cawden and Cudworth, co. of Wilts. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Salisbury, rated at £12. Church ded. to St Lawrence. Patrons, the president and fellows of Corpus-Christi college, Oxford. Distance from Salisbury, 4 m. W.S.W. Pop., in 1801, 119; in 1831, 125. A. P., £912.

STRATTON, a hundred in the co. of Cornwall. It lies in the north-east corner of the county, comprises 12 parishes, including the town of Stratton, from which it takes its name, and, in 1831, contained a population of 8815.

STRATTON, a market town and parish in the hundred of Stratton, co. of Cornwall. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Cornwall and dio. of Exeter, rated at £10 11s. 8d. Church ded. to St Andrew. Patron, the king, as prince of Wales. This place is memorable for a battle fought May 16th, 1642, between the royalists and the parliamentarians, in the time of Charles I., the former commanded by Lord Hopton, the latter by the earl of Stamford, who was defeated with the loss of all his baggage, canon, and ammunition. The Bude canal passes within a mile of the town. The market is held on Tuesday, and there are fairs May 19th, November 8th, and December 11th. Petty sessions are held here the first Tuesday of every month, a court leet annually by the lord of the manor, and a court baron annually by the lord of the manor of Efford. The Wesleyan Methodists have here a place of worship, and there is a donation for educating 15 boys and ten girls. Lands are also vested in feeoffees for the benefit of the poor of the parish, which yield annually £115. Distance from Launceston, 17½ m. N.N.W.; from London, 223 m. S.W. Pop., in 1801, 960; in 1831, 1613. A. P., £3,563.

STREATHAM, a parish in the hundred of Brixton, co. of Surrey. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Surrey and dio. of Winchester, rated at £18 13s. 9d. Church ded. to St Leonard. Patron, in 1829, the duke of Bedford. Streatham can now be scarcely considered any thing else than a suburb of the metropolis, running for three miles along the Brighton road. The houses are mostly modern, well built, and interspersed with detached villas and splendid mansions, particularly in the neighbourhood of the common. Streatham-park, the residence of Mr Thrale, is famous as the place which for so many years afforded a pleasant retreat for Dr Johnson in his seasons of listlessness and melancholy, and where, by the devotion and the diligence of his admiring friends, many of his most brilliant sayings were elicited and preserved. The neighbourhood is richly wooded, the scenery finely varied with hills and valleys, and the air peculiarly salubrious, which, with other local advantages, renders the village a favourite residence with many opulent families. Here is a mineral spring, which has long been in high repute for curing scorbutic eruptions. No manufactures are carried on here except a little in the silk line, which has been only recently introduced.

In aid of the established church a chapel has been of late erected at Upper Tooting. The living is a curacy, in the patronage of the rector of the parish. There are places of worship also for the Independents and the Wesleyan Methodists. The St Anne's society for maintaining and educating poor children, originally formed in 1709, have erected here, at Brixton hill, a house for the purposes of the establishment, at the expense of £8,000. The number of children at present on the foundation is 78 boys and 28 girls, who are wholly maintained and educated, the boys till they be 14, and the girls till they be 15, when they are apprenticed at the expense of the society. A national school is supported by subscription, and there are several bequests for different charitable purposes. The celebrated Dr Hoadley was rector of this parish previously to his being promoted to the episcopal church. Distance from London, 6 m. S.W. Pop., in 1801, 2357; in 1831, 5068. A. P., £25,277.

STRETTON-CHURCH, a market-town and parish in the hundred of Munslow, co. of Salop. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Hereford, rated at £15 10s. The church—a handsome structure, built in the form of a cross, with a tower rising from the centre—is ded. to St Lawrence. Patron, in 1829, T. Colman, Esq. The town is most romantically situated in a valley, seemingly closed in by lofty and impassable mountains. On the one side is the Caer-Caradoc, the lofty and precipitous retreat of Caractacus, the Lawley, and the Raglish; and on the other, the extensive chain called Longmynd, the acclivities of which are cloven with mountain torrents rushing down to the tranquil valleys with thundering impetuosity. The houses are in general built of brick, forming one long street, in the wider part of which stands the market-house, an ancient edifice of timber and plaster, having two upper rooms, supported on wooden pillars, which form a sheltered area for the market. There are many handsome houses in different parts of the town, and a great number of small neat cottages. There is an ample supply of water from pump wells, which are attached to all the more respectable houses, and from a fine stream, which, descending from the Longmynd, flows by one extremity of the town. Owing to its fine situation, the salubrity of its climate, and the deeply interesting scenery with which it is surrounded, Church-Stretton is the resort of numerous parties of pleasure from all the neighbouring towns. There is but little trade carried on, the greater part of the inhabitants being employed in agriculture. A small manufactory of flannel has been of late established, and is making considerable progress. Large flocks of sheep are pastured on the neighbouring hills. A fair for the sale of wool has been lately established. The market—chiefly for provisions—is on Thursday; and there are fairs, besides that we have already mentioned, which is held July 3d, on the 10th of March, the 14th of May, and the 25th of September, principally for sheep; and the last Thursday in November for cattle, horses, and sheep. The county magistrates hold petty sessions here on the third Thursday of every month; and two constables for each township are appointed annually at the court leet held in the old manor-house, now an inn, at which also, under the steward, who must be a lawyer, a court of requests is held for the recovery of small debts.

Among the antiquities of this parish may be noticed an encampment on the summit of Caer-Cardoc, defended on the steepest acclivities by one, and on the more accessible sides by two, sometimes by three entrenchments, hewn out of the rock. This is supposed to have been a station of Caractacus, from whom the hill is also said to have derived its name. There is another encampment of the same kind in the neighbourhood of Clun, where the same hero found refuge, after having made his escape from the Romans, but in which he was at last basely betrayed to the Romans, and sent captive to Rome. On the Longmynd are many low tumuli and cairns of stones; and on the summit of Badbury, which was the scene of numberless battles between the Romans and the Britons, and afterward between the Welsh and the English, is a large entrenchment of earth. One of the tumuli was lately opened under the inspection of Mr Pemberton, rector of the parish; a few half-burnt bones alone were found among some loose stones which had also evidently undergone the action of fire. The foundations of Brockard's-castle, with the approaches to it from Watling-street, can still be easily traced. It lies about a mile to the south-west of the town of Church-Stretton. From the summit of the Longmynd, on which a pole has been erected, denoting the highest point of that extensive range, a most admirable panoramic view is obtained of a wide extent of country in every direction. On the west it embraces the Stiperstones, the Welsh mountains, the Sugar-loaf in Abergavenny, the Table-mountain, Cader-Iddris, and the whole intervening range from that celebrated mountain to the no less celebrated Snowdon; on the south-west the Radnorshire hills; and on the south-east the Edge-wood, the Wrekin, the Clee, and Malvern hills, with the intervening tracts of rich and fertile country.

Here is a free school for all the children of the parish, with a liberal endowment, in which upwards of 100 children, the more respectable paying a small quarterage, are instructed in reading, writing, and arithmetic. There are several almshouses, but without any endowment, and a few bequests for the poor. Distance from Shrewsbury, 13 m. S.W.; from London, 153 m. N.W. Pop., in 1801, 924; in 1831, 1302. A. P., £5,370.

STRETTON-UPON-DUNSMOOR, a parish in the Rugby division of the hundred of Knightlow, co. of Warwick. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Coventry and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, not in charge. STROUD, a market-town and parish in the hundred of Bisleigh, co. of Gloucester. Living, a curacy in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester, certified at £17 5s., returned at £85 4s. 6d. Church ded. to St Lawrence. Patron, the bishop of Gloucester. The town stands upon an eminence near the confluence of the Frome and the Slade. It consists principally of a long street, extending up the side of the hill, which is crossed by another at its base. Both are paved, and both contain many handsome houses. Water is supplied by pipes from some springs in the neighbourhood. The town has long been famous as the centre of the woollen manufacture in Gloucester, and owes its superiority to the water of the Frome or Stroud, which has a peculiar property for fixing scarlet and other grain colours. Its banks are, in consequence, covered with dyeing establishments, fulling-mills, &c., for an extent of 20 miles. The Thames and Severn canal, passing close to the south of the town, gives great facilities for exporting its manufactures, which are carried to all parts of the kingdom. The town has of late years been greatly improved. The market is on Friday; and there are fairs May 10th and August 21st, for cattle, sheep, and pigs. The petty sessions for the hundred are held here on the first and third Fridays of every month. The town is also within the jurisdiction of the court of requests, held at Winchester for the recovery of small debts once every three weeks; and also in that of a court baron, held annually by the lord of the manor of Bisleigh. The reform act has conferred the privilege of returning two members to parliament on this town, in conjunction with the several parishes of Stroud, Bisleigh, Painswick, Pitchcomb, Randwick, Stonehouse, Leonard-Stanley, King's-Stanley, Rodborough, Minchinhampton, Woodchester, Avening, and Horsley, except that part of the parish of Leonard-Stanley which is called LorrIDGE's Farm, and is surrounded by the parish of Berkley. A parochial school is supported by subscriptions. John Canton, F.R.S., a celebrated philosopher, who died in 1772, and Joseph White, D.D., Arabic professor at Oxford, who died in 1814, were both natives of Stroud. Distance from Gloucester, 10 m. S.E.; from London, 102 m. W.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 5422; in 1831, 8607. A. P., £12,215.

STROUD, a parish, partly within the jurisdiction of the city of Rochester, and partly in the hundred of Shamwell, lathe of Aylesford, co. of Kent. Living, a donative in the archd. and dio. of Rochester, not in charge. Church ded. to St Nicholas. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Rochester. The village consists of one long and narrow street. The inhabitants are principally employed in the fisheries on the Medway. There is a fair held on the 17th of August and the three following days, which is well attended. The remains of a mansion that belonged to the Knights Templars are still discernible here. Distance from Rochester, $\frac{1}{2}$ m. N.W. Pop., in 1801, of that portion which belongs to the jurisdiction of Rochester, 1172; in 1831, 1173: of that portion which belongs to the hundred of Shamwell, in 1801, 1172; in 1831, 1549. A. P. of the latter, £6,399; of the former, with the parish.

Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Bedford and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £9, returned at £60. Church ded. to St Mary. Patron, the king. Distance from Market-Street, 4 m. W. S.W. Pop., in 1801, 589; in 1831, 821. A. P., £3,433.

STUDLAND, a parish in the hundred of Rowbarrow, co. of Dorset. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, rated at £7 10s. 5d., returned at £190.

The church—supposed to be at least as old as the time of the conquest—is ded. to St Nicholas. Patron, in 1829, E. M. Pleydell, Esq. This parish, situated at the extremity of the isle of Purbeck, includes Brownsea and several smaller islands. It is bounded on the north by Pool harbour, on the east by Studland bay, and by Swanage bay on the south-east. Studland bay, though an open roadstead, affords excellent anchorage for ships drawing 14 or 15 feet of water. The island of Brownsea is of an oval form, 3 miles in circumference, and contained in the olden time a hermitage and chapel ded. to St Andrew. The castle at its eastern extremity was built in the reign of Queen Elizabeth by the inhabitants of Poole, for the defence of that port. In time of war a few pieces of ordnance are mounted upon a platform adjoining this old castle. Here is also a quay where vessels of considerable burden can load and unload with great convenience. On Studland common are a number of curious barrows, of which the most remarkable is that called the Adlingestone, or Agglestone, an insulated rock about 80 feet in circumference and nearly 20 in height. The eminence on which it is raised comprises half an acre of ground. The slope where steepest is 300 feet, and the perpendicular height 90. It is covered with heath, furze, and fern. Distance from Corfe-Castle, 6 m. E.N.E. Pop., in 1801, 332; in 1831, 435. A. P., £712.

STUDLEY, a chapelry in the parish of Beckley, partly in the hundred of Ashenden, co. of Buckingham, and partly in that of Bullington, co. of Oxford. Living, a curacy to the vicarage of Beckley, in the archd. and dio. of Oxford, not in charge. Patron, the vicar of Beckley. Here was a priory of Benedictine nuns, the revenues of which at the dissolution were estimated at £102 6s. 7d. Distance from Oxford, 6½ m. E.N.E. Pop., in 1801, including Horton, 373; in 1831, 405. A. P., £2,388.

STURBRIDGE, a hamlet in the parish of St Andrew-the-Less, co. of Cambridge, famous for its annual fair, September 28th, which continues for three weeks under the jurisdiction of the university of Cambridge. It is attended by tradesmen and dealers of every description, from all parts of England, and supplied with every article of manufacture and provision, and with all kinds of cattle. Distance from Cambridge, 1½ m. N.N.E.

STURMER, a parish in the hundred of Hincford, co. of Essex. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Middlesex and dio. of London, rated at £8 10s. Patron, in 1829, the duke of Rutland. Distance from Clare, 5½ m. W.S. W. Pop., in 1801, 207; in 1831, 320. A. P., £1,085.

STURMINSTER, a hundred in Sherborne division, co. of Dorset. It lies in the north side of the county, and comprises 5 parishes, with the town from which it takes its name. Pop., in 1831, 11,219.

STURMINSTER-NEWTON-CASTLE, a parish and market town in the hundred of Sturminster, Sherborne division of the co. of Dorset. Living, a vicarage with the curacy of Bagberie, in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, rated at £16 16s. 8d. Church ded. to St Mary. Patron, in 1829, Lord Rivers. The town is situated on both sides of the Stour, over which it has an excellent stone bridge of six arches. It is of high antiquity, and, with the exception of a few near the market place, the houses are old, low, and mean looking. The market house is lofty, the upper part occupied as warehouses, the under as butchers' shambles. The principal manufacture is white baize. The market day is Thursday, and every second Thursday is an extra market, or fair. The petty sessions for the division, and a court leet are held here. Fairs are held May 12th and October 24th. In 1645, the quarters of a small party of the parliamentarians here were broken up by the clubmen of Dorsetshire and Wiltshire, a number being killed on both sides. The town, in 1681, and 1729, suffered severely by fire. The loss at the latter period was upwards of £13,000. An ancient fortification, called the castle, supposed to have been constructed by the Romans, gives the addition of Castle to that part of the parish which is sometimes called Newton. It is situated on the south bank of the river, and consists of a vallum, or deep foss, in the shape of the letter D, and on the top is an artificial mount, or keep, near which are the ruins of an ancient building where the courts were formerly held. The Wesleyan Methodists have here a place of worship, and there is a national school supported chiefly by the Rev. T. L. Fox. Distance from Shaftesbury, 8 m. S.W.; from London, 108 m. W.S.W. Pop., in 1801, 1406; in 1831, 1831. A. P., £5,478.

The livings are, All Saints, a vicarage, St Peter's and St Gregory's, curacies, all in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich; the former rated at £4 11s. 5½d., the two latter not in charge. Patron, of the vicarage, the bishop of Norwich; of the curacies, which are united, Sir Lauchlan Maclean, M.D. Sudbury is situated on the Stour, which is navigable, and over which it has a good stone bridge. This was one of the early seats of the woollen manufacture, and was long in a flourishing condition. The trade, however, left the place, and it was for some time in a state of decay. Of late it has been greatly improved, well paved, and lighted with gas, and some very good houses have been added to it. The trade consists chiefly in the manufacture of silk, crape, and buntings used for ship's flags. The silk has been introduced by the manufactures of Spitalfield, in consequence of disputes with their workmen, and now gives employment to upwards of 1500 of the inhabitants. Between four and five hundred find employment at the crape and bunting business. The market-days are Thursday and Saturday, and there are fairs March 12th, and July 10th. The government is vested in a mayor, six aldermen, and 24 capital burgesses, with a recorder, town-clerk, &c. The mayor is elected from the aldermen by the capital burgesses, with the assent of 24 freeholders. The capital burgesses are elected by the court. The mayor and ex-mayor are justices of the peace. The former holds courts of quarter session, and a court of record every Monday, for the recovery of debts to the amount of £20. The jurisdiction of the court is co-extensive with the borough, which sends two members to parliament. The right of election, before the passing of the reform act, rested with the freemen, in number about 620; the new electors are 301 in number. The mayor is the returning officer.

There is here a free grammar school endowed with lands to the value of £100 per annum. Six boys are upon the foundation. Here is also a national school with a small endowment, which is attended by upwards of 100 children. The hospital of St Leonard's, for lepers, endowed with five acres of land, a chapel, and a dwelling house, is now in the possession of the corporation of the poor, and applied towards their maintenance. Fifty poor men and as many women receive, the former coats and the latter gowns, on St Thomas' day, from a bequest of Thomas Carter. The college of St Gregory, founded by Simon de Theobald, for secular priests, valued at the suppression by Henry VIII., at £122 per annum., has disappeared, with the exception of the gateway and part of a wall, which is incorporated with that of the workhouse. The gateway of a priory of Benedictines is also to be seen in Friar's-street. That of the Black friars has totally disappeared, as has also the hospital dedicated to Jesus Christ and the Blessed Virgin. About a mile from the town is a spring of exceedingly fine water, which is said to possess valuable medicinal qualities, and is by the vulgar dignified with the epithet of 'Holy.' Gainsborough the painter was a native of this place, and it gives the title of baron to the duke of Grafton. Distance from Ipswich, 22 m. S.W.; from London, 56 m. N.N.E. Pop., in 1801, 3988; in 1831, 4677. A. P., £3,471.

SUDLEY-MANOR, a parish in the lower division of the hundred of Kistgate, co. of Gloucester. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester, rated at £6 11s. 4d., returned at £46. Patron, in 1829, Lord Rivers. The church—the burial place of Queen Catherine Parr—has been in a dilapidated state ever since the great civil war. Sudley-castle, being held at that time for the king, shared the fate of the church, and is now an interesting ruin. Distance from Winchcombe, 1 m. S.S.E. Pop., in 1801, 68; in 1831, 84. A. P., £3,683.

SUDLEY-TENEMENTS, a hamlet in the parish of Winchcombe, co. of Gloucester. Pop. with the parish.

SUDLOW, a hamlet in the parish of Rothern, co.-palatine of Chester, 1 m. S.W. from Knutsford. Pop. with the parish.

SUFFIELD, a parish in the north division of the hundred of Erpingham, co. of Norfolk. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich, rated at £14. Church ded. to St Margaret. Patron, in 1829, Lord Suffield. Distance from North Walsham, 3½ m. W.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 179; in 1831, 272. A. P., £1,357.

SUFFIELD WITH EVERLEY, a township in the parish of Hackness, N. R., co. of York, 5 m. W.N.W. from Scarborough. Pop., in 1801, 110; in 1831 124. A. P., £1,447.

SUFFOLK,

A maritime co., bounded on the north by Norfolk; on the east by the German sea; on the south by Essex; and on the west by the co. of Cambridge. It is in length from east to west about 48 miles, and in breadth from north to south about 27. Its area has been calculated at 1512 square miles, or 967,680 statute acres. The general figure of the country is that of a crescent, the northern side towards Norfolk being hollowed in the middle and extended at each end, especially in the east, where the hundred of Mutford and Lothingland forms a projecting corner, reaching to Yarmouth. The south border is irregularly convex. The air is dry and the climate salubrious, though frosts are often severe; and during the spring months the north-easterly winds are frequent and highly injurious to vegetation. The surface of the county is uniformly level, presenting no inequalities of any consequence. The soil, however, notwithstanding this uniformity of surface, is perhaps as various as that of any county in England. Strong clay loams, on a substratum of clay marle, occupy a most extensive tract, extending from the confines of Essex on the south-west, across the central parts of the co. to Norfolk on the north-east. An imaginary line—passing somewhat irregularly from the west border of the county, near Dulham-by-Barrow, Little Saxham, Bury-St-Edmund's, Rayham, Pakenham, Ixworth, and Honington, to the northern boundary at Knettishall—bounds this district on the north-west; another, passing from the banks of the Waveney near North Cove to the east of Beccles, southward by Wrentham and Wangford, then south-westward by Blythford, Bramfield, Saxmundham, Campsea-Ash, Woodbridge, &c., and along the high-lands on the west of the Brent, to the confluence of that stream with the Stour, bounds it on the south-east. In this extensive district, the bottoms—traversed by running streams which are numerous, with the gentle slopes descending towards them—are of a greatly superior quality, and consist of a rich friable loam. Rich loams are also common to the south-east of the previously described district, extending to the estuaries of the Stour and the Orwell. From Deptford and Higham, on the borders of the Stour, eastward across the Orwell, to the banks of the Stour near its mouth, especially around Walton, Trimley, and Felixstow, there lies a tract of friable putrid vegetable mould of extraordinary fertility. In the north-east district, lying between the Waveney and the sea, there is much land of a rich quality, but it is interspersed with so many sandy tracts that it may be justly considered as forming part of the extensive sandy district extending between the clayey loams and the sea, from the Orwell to the north-east extremity of the county. The lands of this district are, however, generally of excellent staple, and they are perhaps the best cultivated in England. Still there is a large extent of poor, sometimes even blowing sand; that is, sand yielding to the force of the wind, whence this part of the county is called 'Sandlings,' or 'Sandlands.' The substratum is sometimes marle, generally sand, chalk, or crag. This last is a singular mass, consisting of oockle and other shells, and is found in numerous places from Dunwich southward as far as the Orwell, and even beyond that river. Sand occupies the whole extent between the clay soils and the fens, which occupy the north-west angle of the county. Unlike the eastern division of the county, this western sand district has no rich loamy spots. Much of what is under tillage blows with the wind, and consequently must be ranked among the poorest of soils, and large tracts are occupied as warrens and poor sheep walks. The substratum here is throughout perfect chalk, at various depths. Of the fens, the surface is from the depth of one to six or more feet peat earth; in some places solid and black, in others loose, porous, and red; the substratum is mostly a white clay.

Produce.—With all this variety, and, in many places, poverty of soil, the greater part of the county is under tillage, and the modes of culture are admirably adapted to the nature of the soil. On the rich loam and lighter soils the Norfolk system is generally followed. Turnips, on the sand soils, are universally employed as a preparative crop, before corn or grass. In the fens paring and burning is practised. The course of crops, after this operation, is generally cole seed, then oats, two crops, the last laid down with rye-grass and clover, under which the land lies for six or seven years, when it is again pared and burned as before. The crops more generally cultivated over the county are wheat, barley, oats, beans, pease, buck-wheat, turnips, cabbages, carrots, potatoes, tares, cole-seed, red and white clover, trefoil, sainfoin, hemp, hops, &c. The produce varies greatly on the different soils. Wheat is calculated to average about 22 bushels per acre, barley 32, oats 36. Rye, once very generally sown, is now confined to the poorest soils, and averages about 16 bushels per acre. Beans are confined to the strong clay soils. Pease, flourishing on a greater variety of soils, are more generally cultivated, but the produce is very uncertain. Buck-wheat is sown upon poor sands, chiefly for feeding poultry. Carrots have been cultivated in the 'Sandlings,' time immemorial, and were wont to be sent by sea to the London market. They are now grown principally as food for horses. On good land, the produce is from four to five hundred bushels per acre. They stand here in the field through the winter, being taken up only as they are wanted. Potatoes, in every part of the county, are grown extensively. Tares are raised only as green food for horses. Cole-seed, in the fen district, is one of the principal crops, chiefly as food for sheep. When raised for seed, it is, when ripe, thrashed upon cloths in the field, and the straw burned. The produce averages about 20 bushels per acre. Clover, trefoil, and sainfoin, are extensively cultivated, often for seed. The culture of hemp is confined to a tract of about 10 miles in extent, between Beccles and Eye. The produce averages about 40 stones per acre. Hops are cultivated only in the neighbourhood of Market-Stow, and the produce does not appear to be such as to encourage a more extended practice. The manures principally employed are clay, marl, and chalk, the latter being brought from Essex by the corn hoys. Dung is also brought in considerable quantities from London.

Animals, &c.—The grass lands are not remarkable for excellence, nor is the extent of the dairy farms nearly so great as formerly.

Still, large quantities of butter are sent to the London market. Considerable tracts are also mown for supplying hay to the different towns: the produce is inconsiderable. The Suffolk cows are celebrated for the quantity of their milk, though it has been alleged to be different in quality. This may be owing in some degree to the nature of the pastures, or, perhaps, is a rash conclusion drawn from the Suffolk cheese, which is notorious for its tenacity, being sometimes so hard as to defy the knife, and yielding only to the saw, and that in a powerful hand. This, however, is not owing to any original defect in the milk, but to the methods employed for extracting the cream before the milk is made into cheese. The general characteristics of the Suffolk cow are a snake-like head, small dewlap, legs slender and short, body large, with flat loins, a full udder, colour various. They are universally polled, and of small size, seldom, even when full fed, weighing more than 50 stone. In some parts of the county numerous black cattle are fattened, but they are almost all imported from Scotland. Vast flocks of sheep are pastured in the more barren districts, mostly of the South Down breed. The breed of hogs is excellent. They are well made, small boned, and have short and thick noses. Rabbits are numerous in the western district; and for poultry, especially turkeys, the county excels every other in the kingdom except Norfolk, which it fairly rivals. The Suffolk breed of horses is particularly famous, and it is found in the greatest perfection on that tract lying between the sea and the towns of Woodbridge, Debenham, and Eye.

Suffolk, as we have already remarked, has nothing in the shape of hills, nor has it any thing to boast of in the shape of woods. Formerly the strong loams bore considerable quantities of fine oak. Now, the forests are cleared entirely off, nothing being left but a few straggling trees or ornamental plantations. There are considerable wastes on the borders of Cambridgeshire, and also in the eastern portion of the county, and barren heaths are to be met with in all parts of it, which are used only as sheep walks. Wood, among the poorer classes, is the principal fuel; and in the neighbourhood of the fens and commons, turf coal is used by all the better classes.

Rivers.—Though destitute of hills, and no wise overgrown with woods, Suffolk is abundantly provided in rivers. The principal are the Stour, the Gippen, or Orwell, the Deben, the Ore, the Waveney, the Little Ouse, or Brandon, and the Lark. The smaller streams are nearly innumerable. Rising on the borders of the county near Cambridgeshire, the Stour runs south to the vicinity of Haverhill, to the east of which it begins to form the southern boundary, and continues so through its whole remaining course. Passing the towns of Claro, Sudbury, and Nayland, it is augmented by the powerful stream of the Bret, descending from the north-west. It meets the tide of Manningtree in Essex, below which it expands into a broad estuary, which, at high-water, has a fine appearance, but, at low-water, has the appearance of an extensive tract of mud. Meeting with the Orwell near Harwich, their united streams form the port of that place; and between it and Landguard port, at the south-east extremity of this county, discharge themselves into the North sea. This river is navigable as far as Sudbury.—The Gippen, formed by the junction of three rivulets near Market-Stow, flows in a south-easterly course by Needham-Market to Ipswich, below which town it assumes the name of Orwell, expands into an estuary, by which it flows into the Stour near Harwich.—The Orwell is navigable for vessels of considerable burden up to Ipswich, and the scenery on its banks is highly beautiful.—The Deben has its source near Debenham, and, passing that town, flows south-east to the village of Rendlesham, where it takes a south-easterly course to Woodbridge. Here it expands into a wide estuary, by which, in a southerly direction, it falls into the North sea. The estuary of the Deben is also called Woodbridge-haven. It is navigable to Woodbridge for vessels of considerable burden.—The Ald has its sources north of Framlingham, and, flowing south-east, expands into an estuary as it approaches Aldborough. Here, having nearly reached the sea, it turns to the south and discharges its water into the ocean below Orford. It is navigable a little way above Aldborough.—The Waveney has its source in a swamp near the village of Lopham in Norfolk. Immediately on its rise it becomes the boundary of the county, and continues to be so through its whole course. It flows first east, then north-east towards Bungay, where it makes an extensive bend, after which it reassumes its easterly course by Beccles, beyond which, meeting some rising grounds, it turns north into the Yare, which it joins at the head of an expansion called Bredon water, formed principally by the union of these two rivers. This expansion contracts itself again near Yarmouth, and the united rivers pursuing a southerly course, fall into the sea a little below that town. The Waveney is navigable for barges as far up as Bungay bridge, and the meadows along its banks are accounted among the richest in England.—The Little Ouse, or Brandon water, has its source very near to those of the Waveney, but takes an entirely opposite course. Forming the northern boundary of the county, it flows westward to the vicinity of Barnham, where it takes a northerly direction to Thetford in Norfolk. Below Thetford it turns again to the west, passes the town of Brandon, and quits the county at its north-west extremity. It is navigable to Thetford.—Rising in the south-west of the county, the Lark keeps a northerly course to Bury, thence north-west to Mildenhall, below which it becomes the western boundary of the county, which it quits near its north-western extremity, and shortly after falls into the Little Ouse.—The Blythe has its source near Laxfield, in the hundred of Hoxne, and holds a north-easterly course to Halesworth, where it becomes navigable, and whence flowing east by Blythorough, it falls into the North sea at Southwold. The only artificial navigation in the county is that in the channel of the Glpsea, from Stow-Market to Ipswich. It is 16 miles and 40 rods in length, and has 16 locks, and was executed at an expense of between £26 and £27,000.

History.—At the period of the Roman invasion this county formed part of the territory inhabited by the Iceni, one of the most powerful of the native tribes, from whom the Ikenild-street, or road of the Iceni, derived its name. Under the Roman dominion it was included in the division called Flavia Caesariensis. Cerdic the Saxon made a descent here at a place afterwards called Cerdic Sand, in the hundred of Mutford and Lothingland, in the year 495. After gaining some advantages over the inhabitants however, he departed for the western parts of the island. It was after this gradually overrun by the Angles, and one of their chiefs, Ossa, or Uffa, about the year 575, established the kingdom of East Anglia, comprising the counties of Suffolk, Cambridge, and Norfolk. The relative position of this county procured for its inhabitants the name of Southfolk, in contradistinction from their neighbours in the north, who were called Northfolk, whence the names of the two counties. Christianity was established here by King Sigebert, who brought over with him from the continent a Burgundian bishop named Felix, whom he appointed bishop of East Anglia, and who fixed his seat at Dunwich in this county, where he died in 647. His successor Bosa, in 669, divided the see into two bishoprics, the seat of the one being fixed at Elmham in Norfolk, and the other remaining at Dunwich. In 870 the sees were reunited, when Elmham became the sole seat of the diocese. After many sanguinary battles, East Anglia was rendered tributary to the kingdom of Mercia, which it continued to be till the kingdom of Wessex obtained a preponderating influence in the Octarchy that then divided the southern part of the island. Under the influence of that kingdom it had for a short time its own kings, till the reign of the East Anglian king, Edmund, who, after being murdered by the Danes under Ingvar and Ubba, was sur-named the Martyr. The marauders made themselves masters of the whole of East Anglia, which they nearly destroyed in their fatal progress.

After the conquest, when the whole political system was changed, this county was often the scene of tumult and blood. Ipswich, in the year 1155, was besieged and taken by King Stephen. His son, Eustace, also committed great ravages at the same time in the neighbourhood of Bury, at which town he died the same year. During the reign of Henry II., in 1173, the earl of Leicester, supporting the claims of the king's eldest son, Prince Henry, landed in this county with an army of Flemings, and joined by Hugh Bigod, earl of Lancaster, overran and laid waste nearly the whole county. Being met, however, near Bury, by Richard de Lacy, chief-justice of England, and Humphrey de Bohun, the constable, they were defeated with great slaughter, and Lancaster with his countess made prisoners. During the baronial war, 1215, Saher de Quincey, earl of Winchester, retired from the siege of Colchester with his foreign mercenaries to Bury St Edmunds; and during the two following years, Louis the Dauphin, in conjunction with the barons, reduced the whole county to subjection, committing at the same time most cruel ravages. In 1267, the insurgent barons having taken post in the isle of Ely, Henry III. chose Bury in Suffolk as the place of rendezvous for his forces. In 1328, Bury was again made a royal head quarters by Isabella, queen of Edward II., who remained a considerable time recruiting her forces and collecting from all quarters her adherents. Many of the Suffolk men, during the rebellion of Wat Tyler, joined the Norfolk insurgents in their formidable revolt, which was suppressed by Spenser, bishop of Norwich. Henry VII., in 1486, apprehending that it might be invaded by the adherents of Lambert Simnel, the pretended Edward Plantagenet, made a progress through the whole county of Suffolk. In the 15th year of the same king's reign, Ralph Wilford, the son of a shoemaker, instructed by an Augustine friar, set up for the earl of Warwick. The friar from the pulpit inculcating the legitimacy of the impostor's pretensions, they very soon gained credit with the unstable multitude. Master and pupil were soon, however, apprehended, the latter hanged, and the former condemned to perpetual imprisonment, which ended the matter. In 1526 an alarming insurrection of the inhabitants of Lavenham, Hudleigh, and Sudbury, was put down by the united exertions of the dukes of Norfolk and Suffolk. On the death of Edward VI., the inhabitants of Suffolk were particularly zealous in support of the princess Mary, in opposition to the adherents of Lady Jane Gray. Mary on this occasion removed from Norfolk to Framlingham in Suffolk. Queen Elizabeth, in 1561, made one of her imposing progresses through this county, preceded by a magnificent cavalcade, at the head of which was the high sheriff. In the great civil war this was one of the eastern counties associated on behalf of the parliament, and placed under the command of the earl of Manchester. In the Dutch war in the reign of Charles II., the memorable engagement between the Dutch and English fleets, in which the former were defeated with the loss of 18 ships taken, and 14 sunk, took place off Lowestoft on this coast. Southwold bay on this coast, was again, 1672, the scene of a sanguinary engagement between the French and English fleets on the one side, and the Dutch fleet on the other. The French squadron, on the commencement of the action, set sail, leaving it to the Dutch and English, who with equal bravery, and, perhaps, with equal folly, fought till the one, the Dutch, were with difficulty able to retreat, and the other totally unable to pursue. The last event of a military kind recorded of the county, seems to be that of the fortifying of Lowestoft and other places along this coast on account of a threatened invasion in 1782.

Antiquities.—The antiquities of the county consist of British, Roman, and Danish camps, tumuli, domestic (Roman) utensils, coins, medals, rings, urns, pavements, &c., which will be described under the parishes where they lie, or have been discovered. The religious houses in the county, of all denominations, including four alien priories, was fifty-nine. They also will be found particularised under their own names, or under the parishes where they are situated.

Ecclesiastical Divisions.—Suffolk is comprised in the dio. of Norwich and province of Canterbury. Its western part, with such parishes in Cambridgeshire as belong to the diocese of Norwich, constitute the archdeaconry of Sudbury, which is divided into eight deaneries, seven of which are in the county. Its eastern part forms the archdeaconry of Suffolk, which comprises fourteen deaneries. The total number of parishes is 500, of which 322 are rectories, 97 vicarages, and the remainder curacies.

Civil Divisions.—The two grand civil divisions of the county are the franchise or liberty of Bury-St-Edmunds, and the remaining part, or body of the county, as it is termed, each at the county assizes furnishing a distinct grand jury. It is further divided into the guildable portion, in which the issues and forfeitures are paid to the king, and the franchises, in which they are paid to the lords of the liberties. These franchises are the liberty of St Ethelred, which belonged formerly to the prior and convent of the saint, now to the dean and chapter of Ely; the franchise or liberty of St Edmund, given to the abbot of Bury by Edward the Confessor; and the liberty of the duchy of Norfolk, granted by letters patent from Edward IV., in which the duke has the returning of all writs, and the right of appointing a special coroner and of receiving all fines and amercements. The county is farther divided into 21 hundreds and one liberty, Ipswich, which comprise 7 boroughs and 21 market towns. Suffolk now returns four members to parliament. The two for the western division are elected at Bury-St-Edmunds, those for the eastern division at Ipswich. The polling places for the former are Wickham-Brook, Lavenham, Stowmarket, Botesdale, Mil-denhall, and Hadleigh. The polling places for the latter division are Needham, Woodbridge, Framlingham, Saxmundham, Halesworth, and Beccles. The county is included in the Norfolk circuit, and the assizes are held at Bury. Pop., in 1801, 210,431; in 1831, 296,000. A. P., £1,127,404.

SUGLEY, a township in the parish of Newburn, co. of Northumberland, in which is the extensive manufactory called the Tyne iron works. Distance from Newcastle, 4 m. W. Pop., in 1801, with East Denton, 824; in 1831, 779. A. P. with the parish.

SUGNAL-MAGNA, a township in the parish of Eccleshall, co. of Stafford, $5\frac{1}{4}$ m. W.N.W. from Eccleshall. Pop., in 1801, 115; in 1831, 130. A. P. with the parish.

SUNDERLAND,

A seaport, market-town, and parish, in the north division of Easington ward, co.-palatine of Durham. The livings are a rectory and a curacy, in the archd. and dio. of Durham, not in charge, returned at £89. The church, a neat brick building, with a square tower containing five bells, is dedicated to the Holy Trinity.

Description.—The town is pleasantly situated on the south bank of the river Wear, which, having its source on the border of Cumberland, at the western extremity of the district through which it runs, gives to it the name of Weardale. The town consists of several streets, the principal nearly a mile in length, and communicating with the High-street of Bishop-Wearmouth. The streets are in general broad, paved, and lighted with gas. The houses, substantial and well-built, are supplied with water by pipes from two large reservoirs, filled from a well by means of a steam-engine. Offering every encouragement, and possessing all the natural and artificial conveniences for bathing, Sunderland has become a fashionable place of resort for that always agreeable, and sometimes necessary amusement. Among the other inducements for strangers to take up a temporary residence here, may be noticed various literary institutions, the chief of which are an excellent and very extensive subscription library, and a mechanics' institution, in which lectures on the various branches of science are delivered from time to time. This institution also possesses a select library. There is also in the town a commodious theatre, an elegant assembly room, an exchange, and a handsome news-room, inferior only to those of Manchester and Liverpool. Here are also barracks, a custom house, and excise office. The most admirable of the public buildings in Sunderland, however, is the iron-bridge, remarkable for its height and span, and peculiar lightness of construction, which connects it with the township of Monk-Wearmouth. This magnificent structure was built under the direction of Mr Thomas Wilson of Bishop-Wearmouth, at an expense of upwards of £33,000. It consists of one vast arch, 236 feet in the span, and 100 feet in height from low-water mark, allowing vessels of large burden to pass underneath with merely lowering their top-gallants. The abutments are solid masonry 24 feet thick, 42 broad at the bottom and 37 at the top. The arch is formed of small segments of iron. The breadth of the carriage way is 82 feet, with flagged foot-paths on each side defended by an iron balustrade. The whole weight of the iron employed is 260 tons, of which only 46 tons are malleable.

Harbour.—Sunderland owes its importance to its situation upon the coast, at the influx of a navigable river, flowing through a district abounding in the invaluable and marketable articles of coal and lime. The harbour, being not natural but artificial, has been sometimes seriously injured by land-floods, and by the formation of sand banks. Of late years, however, it has received great improvements. It is formed by two piers called the north and south, which have been original constructed at great expense, and subsequently greatly enlarged. The south pier is about 626 yards in length, having a tide-light placed at its extremity. The north pier, begun in 1789, is now 1850 feet in length, having near its extremity an elegant octagonal lighthouse, built of free-stone, 68 feet high from the pier to the under side of the cap, lighted with gas by means of nine argand lamps and reflectors, each of the latter being 18 inches in diameter. An elevated promenade, similar to that of Margate, has been recently formed here, and as the pier projects a considerable way into the sea, it is frequented as a healthy as well as a delightful place of recreation. The mouth of the pier is defended by batteries placed on the opposite shore.

Trade.—The grand staple of Sunderland is the coal trade, more than a million of tons being sent annually to London, the west of England, and the Baltic. Lime also forms an important article of trade here, upwards of 40,000 tons being shipped every year for Yorkshire and Scotland, especially the latter, where it is used as manure. Other portions of the export trade are supplied by the numerous manufactures of the town and neighbourhood. These consist of flint and crown-glass, copperas works, a brass foundry, potteries, roperies, chain-cable, and sail-cloth. There are also saw-mills wrought by steam, and quarries of a stone peculiarly suited for grind-stones. In one of these is a fine vein of black marble, of which chimneys and other ornaments are constructed

The patent ropery at Deptford is worked by a steam-engine of 16 horse power, and is capable of producing 500 tons of cordage in the year, within the usual hours of labour. The imports are flour, wine, spiritous liquors, timber, tallow, iron, and flax. Ship-building is carried on to a great extent, 80 or 100 vessels being frequently placed on the stocks at one time. For building ships there are 30 yards, five for building boats, four dry-docks, and four floating docks. The number of vessels built from 1824 to 1826 inclusive, was 252. By the parliamentary returns printed by order of the house of commons, it appears that this port—as respects the gross amount of tonnage and the average size and number of its ships—is the fourth port in the united kingdom; the tonnage being the one-twenty-first part of the aggregate tonnage of the united kingdom, one-seventeenth part of the tonnage of England, one-third of the whole tonnage of Scotland, and exceeding by 5087 tons the gross amount of the tonnage of all Ireland. The number of ships belonging to the port in 1829, was 625; the tonnage 107,880, and the magnitude of its maritime trade is evinced by the circumstance of 9180 ships having been, during that year, cleared coastwise and to foreign parts, at the custom-house. The exports and the imports have for a long period been annually on the increase, and as the formation of wet docks and other improvements for the accommodation of additional shipping are in contemplation, Sunderland may be expected to rise still higher in commercial and in maritime importance. Salmon fishing, which was once extensively prosecuted here, has been abandoned; but cod, ling, turbot, haddock, skate, herrings, crabs, and lobsters, are caught in great abundance. A number of steam-boats are constantly employed towing vessels in and out of the harbour.

Municipal Government.—Sunderland is a borough, with a corporation, and sends two members to parliament, in conjunction with the several townships of Bishop-Wearmouth, Bishop-Wearmouth-Panay, Monk-Wearmouth, Monk-Wearmouth-Shore, and Southwick. The total number of electors is about 2300. The inhabitants had their first charter of privileges in the 12th century, from Bishop Pudsey. In 1634, by a charter from Bishop Morton, the inhabitants were incorporated under the style of mayor, aldermen, and commonalty, of the borough of Sunderland. The mayor was clerk of the market. The practical operation of this charter ceased almost as soon as it was granted, the original nominees being the only individuals who acted under it. The corporate body now—which seems to be self-styled and self-constituted—consists of 12 capital burgesses or freemen, and 18 inferior burgesses called Stalingers. The former are entitled to graze two horses or four cows, on the town moor, the latter one cow. The widows of freemen have the same right for two cows or one horse. The clerk of the corporation exercises the same privilege as a part of his salary. The town interests are let in two leases by the bishop. One includes the borough courts, fairs, markets, tolls, ancherage, and beaconnage, and the office of water-bailiff. The other comprises the ferry-boats and metage, and tolls of fruits, herbs, and roots. The bishop holds his baronial court here annually, and a court-leet for the recovery of small debts. Petty-sessions are held every Friday, by the county-magistrates.

Benevolent Institutions, &c.—A new church in aid of the establishment has been lately erected, and there are places of worship for the Society of Friends, the Baptists, the Independents, Scotch Seceders, the Calvinistic, Primitive, and Wesleyan Methodists, the Methodists of the New Connexion, the Presbyterians, the Unitarians, the Roman Catholics, and the Jews, making in all, 19 dissenting places of worship. Charitable institutions, for the protection of the aged, the relieving the afflicted, and the educating of the young, are numerous and liberally supplied. Among the schools are one for clothing and educating 86 poor girls, according to the will of Elizabeth Donnison, who left for that purpose money in the three per cents, yielding £78 per annum; another for boys and girls belonging to members of the Society of Friends, pursuant to the will of Edward Walton. The master's income is £26 per annum, and 20 boys are on the foundation. A school of industry is supported by the overseers. A school upon the national plan, in which upwards of 300 boys and 60 girls are educated, is supported by subscriptions. Sabbath schools are numerous. The infirmary, dispensary, house of recovery, and humane society, are consolidated into one well regulated establishment. Almshouses for 38 superannuated seamen with their widows, are supported by sixpence per month, levied by act of parliament, from every sailor employed in the port. There is also an almshouse for 10 widows or unmarried daughters of master mariners, above the age of 56, founded 1820, by Elizabeth Woodcock, in which the inmates receive an annuity of £10 for life. Cholera made its first appearance in England at this port. Sunderland gives the title of earl to the family of Mariborough. Distance from Durham, 13 m. N.E.; from London, 269 m. N.W. Pop., in 1801, 12,412; in 1831, 17,060. A. P., £13,366.

SUNDERLAND-BY-THE-BRIDGE, a township in the parish of St Andrew-Auckland, co. palatine of Durham. It is pleasantly situated on the ridge of a hill between the Wear and Croxdale-water; over the former there is a bridge, from which is derived the appellation by Bridge. Distance from Durham, 3½ m. S.S.W. Pop., in 1801, 250; in 1831, 283. A. P., £1,055.

SUNDERLAND (NORTH), a township in the parish of Bamborough, co. of Northumberland. It has the sea on the east, and possesses a small port subject to Berwick, by which are exported corn, fish, lime, &c. Here is a place of worship for the Presbyterians, and a school with a small endowment. Distance from Belford, 8½ m. E.S.E. Pop., in 1801, 496; in 1831, 860. A. P. with the parish.

SUNDERLAND-WICK, a township in the parish of Hutton-Cranswick, E. R., co. of York, 2½ m. S.W. from Great Driffield. Pop., in 1801, 19; in 1831, 35. A. P., £822.

SUNDON, a parish in the hundred of Whitt, co. of Bedford. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Bedford and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £82 10s. Church ded. to St Mary. Patron, in 1829, Sir John Riddle, Bart. Distance from Luton, 4½ m. N.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 315; in 1831, 408. A. P., £2,039.

SUNRIDGE, a parish in the hundred of Codsheath, lathe of Sutton-at-Hone, co. of Kent. Living, a rectory and a peculiar in the dio. of Canterbury, rated at £22 13s. 4d. Patron, the archbishop of Canterbury. The river Darwent runs through this parish, on which there are some paper mills. Here is a rent charge for educating six children, and a national school upon a large scale. The duke of Argyle has the title of baron from this place. Distance from Seven-Oaks, 5 m. N.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 715; in 1831, 1268. A. P., £4,798.

SUNK-ISLAND, an extra-parochial district in the south division of the wapentake of Holderness, E. R., co. of York. This island first began to appear in the reign of Charles I., by the recess of the tides in the Humber, leaving a few acres dry at low water. The area, increasing every year in extent, was secured by an embankment, to which additional embankments were from time to time added, by which the few original acres have been increased to upwards of 5000 in a high state of cultivation. Every year seems to be adding to its extent. When it first began to attract attention, it was two miles from the opposite shore, and vessels formerly passed through the channel, which is now so narrow as to be crossed by a bridge to the mainland. It has a small chapel in the patronage of the archbishop of York. Distance from Kingston-upon-Hull, 20 m. E.S.E. Pop., in 1811, 209; in 1831, 242. A. P., £9,772.

SUNNINGHILL, a parish in the hundred of Cookham, co. of Berks. Living, a vicarage, a peculiar of the dean of Salisbury, certified at £10. Church ded. to St Michael. Patrons, the master and fellows of St John's college, Cambridge. This parish lies in the most delightful part of Windsor Forest, bordering on Ascot-heath. It contains many beautiful villas, and is celebrated for its mineral waters, which are much frequented during the summer. Here was a small convent of Benedictine nuns. Being deserted by the sisters in 1522, it escheated to the crown, and was bestowed on St John's college, Cambridge. Distance from New Windsor, 6 m. S.S.W. Pop., in 1801, 700; in 1831, 1520. A. P., £4,310.

SUNNINGWELL, a parish in the hundred of Hormer, co. of Berks. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Berks and dio. of Salisbury, rated at £12 13s. 7d. The church, which is very ancient and of a singular form, is ded. to St Leonard. Patron, in 1829, Sir G. Bower. The village is finely situated on the banks of the Thames. Distance from Abingdon, 2½ m. N. Pop., in 1801, 197; in 1831, 339. A. P., £1,894.

SURFLEET, a parish in the wapentake of Kirton, parts of Holland, co. of Lincoln. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln. Living, a rectory, an impropriation, and a vicarage, in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln, rated, the former at £27 17s. 11d., the latter at £11, but returned at £31. Church ded. to St Lawrence. Patron, in 1829, Mr Peckworth. Here is a canal called the Glen, by which the waters of Pinchbeck are conveyed to the Welland river, and another termed the Grand Sluice, which conveys the waters of the Fen to Boston. It contains the finest heronry in England, and two endowed schools. Distance from Spalding, 4 m. N. Pop., in 1801, 609; in 1831, 871. A. P., £5,048.

SURLINGHAM, a parish in the hundred of Henstead, co. of Norfolk. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich, rated at £6 13s. 4d., returned at £120 11s. 7d. Church ded. to St Mary. Patron, in 1829, the Rev. W. Collet. Here is a ferry across the Yare. Distance from Norwich, 5½ m. E.S.E. Pop., in 1801, 308; in 1831, 399. A. P., £1,672.

SURRENDRAI, a tything in the parish of Hullavington, co. of Wilt, 5 m. S.W. from Malmesbury. Pop., in 1801, 26; in 1831, 34. A. P. with the parish.

SURREY,

An inland county, bounded on the N. by the Thames, which separates it from Middlesex and Buckinghamshire, on the E. by Kent, by Sussex on the S., and on the W. by Hampshire and Berkshire. Its figure is oblong, being from N.E. to S.W. 37 m. in length, and from N. to S. 27 m. in breadth, comprising an area of 758 square statute miles, or 485,120 square acres; of which 80,000 are arable, 300,000 pasturage, and 70,000 uncultivated. Deeply indented on its northern border, by the beautiful and picturesque windings of the Thames, Surrey has been aptly compared to a piece of coarse cloth with a finely ornamented border; the outskirts, especially on the north, being fertile, while the centre portions are relatively barren. Along the banks of the Thames are rich meadows, large tracts of garden ground, interspersed with numerous villas and thriving plantations, forming a striking contrast with the naked heaths and wild commons that expand towards the south. The surface is, for the most part, gently undulating, the Weald excepted, which is a district of about 30 miles in length, and varying from 3 to 5 in breadth, stretching along the whole southern border, and, with the Wealds of Kent and Sussex, forming an immense plain, the surface of which, at the highest point, is of very inferior elevation. Some of the hills, however, rise to a considerable height, commanding rich and extensive views. A line of open downs, consisting of chalk hills, stretches across the middle of the county, having a gradual declivity on the north, but on the south terminating in lofty and precipitous cliffs. To the south of these downs rises another line of hills, the soil of which is a deep sandy loam, varying in colour, and of different degrees of fertility. The Weald, which we have already noticed, is a strong stiff clay, and the southern skirt of the county, which is well watered, displays a rich variety of wood, pasture, and arable land. Banstead Downs, in the chalk district, are noted as sheep walks of the richest quality. Epsom Warren is famous for its race ground. Box Hill, covered with the finest box-trees in England, and the White Down, so called from the colour of the soil, lie in the centre of the county. Five miles to the south of Dorking stands Leith Hill, which commands a beautiful prospect 200 miles in circumference. In the south-east part of the county, Holmsdale was formerly a forest of holm-oak, whence the name of the district, and the sequestered haunt of red deer. Bagshot-heath occupies a large portion of the western part of the county bordering on Berkshire; and to the south of Bagshot are other heaths and moors of considerable extent, intermingled, however, with fertile and well cultivated valleys. The climate varies considerably. The greatest quantity of rain falls in the vale of London, and the atmosphere of the district is moist. It is the same in the southern border, from the flatness of the surface and the immense number of trees obstructing the circulation of the air. On the downs and the heaths about Bagshot, Aldershot, and Hindhead, the air is dry, keen, and bracing. The spring is generally early, vegetation being little checked by easterly winds, which frequently so much retard it in other counties.

Soil.—The soil is here as various as in most other counties, but the different kinds are by no means so clearly marked by boundary lines, being generally found in patches greatly intermixed. They may, however, be classed under the general heads of clay, loam, chalk, and sand. The most extensive tract bearing a uniform character is the Weald, being almost throughout, a pale, cold, retentive clay, upon a subsoil nearly the same, but mixed with iron. A little deeper it is a white clay of a slaty texture, the laminae of which is extremely thin. Upon the north border of the Weald, where the soil approaches to loam, the substratum is ragstone. To the north of this lies a district of sandy loam, which stretches nearly across the county, including the hills that overlook the Weald. This soil is of great depth, but of varied fertility. The richest portion of it lies around Godalming. To the north of this is the chalky soil of the Downs, the most fertile portions of which are a pure hazel loam of various depths, lying on a substratum of chalk rock. A soil less friable and mixed with flints intervenes between Croydon and Gadstone, and on all the declivities of the chalk hills. Along the summit of the Downs about Walton and Headly, is a large extent of heath, covering a soil of ferruginous and barren sand. A peculiar kind of bluish clay, called 'blackland,' extends in a narrow tract along the south side of the chalk hills from Reigate into the county of Kent. Proceeding northward from the eastern extremity of the Downs, a variety of soils occur, chiefly strong clays, interspersed with sandy loam and patches of gravel. They continue all the way to Dulwich, where, to the eastern extremity of the county, is one continued tract of fine strong clay. Another tract of clay stretches from Banstead downs by Sutton-Mendon, and on the east of Merton to the sandy loams of Wimbledon, Putney-heath, and Mortlake. The rich sandy soil lying between the clay and the Thames, especially on the banks of the Mole and the Wye, is intermingled with loams of various quality, and, in some places, with clay. Of these northern sands the subsoil is a yellow silicious gravel. North-west from Guilford sandy loams first occur in the vicinity of Stoke, and afterward strong retentive clays, which extend beyond Warplestown, where they unite with the heaths. On the banks of the Thames the soil is partly a sandy and partly a rich strong loam.

Produce.—The crops generally grown are wheat, barley, oats, beans, and pease. Wheat is sown to a great extent. The barley is of a very superior quality, and is mostly made into malt. All the varieties of field pease are extensively cultivated as an agricultural crop in most parts of the county, especially on the chalk hills, while the more delicate kinds are grown in the vicinity of the metropolis, and on the sandy loams in the vale of the Thames, chiefly for the London market. Turnips, cabbages, carrots, and parsnips, are extensively cultivated, the latter, especially, in the rich deep lands between Wandsworth and Kingston, solely for the London market. Red clover is extensively cultivated, and, for the most part, made into hay. Trefoil, white clover, and ryegrass, are occasionally sown; and extensive tracts of chalky soils are occupied by sainfoin, most of which is made into hay. Lucerne is sometimes grown, but upon a limited scale. Hops are extensively cultivated in the neighbourhood of Farnham, on the borders of Hampshire. They grow here in the highest perfection, and fetch at all times the best prices. Woad flourishes on the chalk hills about Banstead, where it is sown along with barley. Along the banks of the Thames, in the north-west of the county, and on the banks of the Wey, near Godalming, are many extensive and rich meadows; there are also a few in the north-east of the county, in the neighbourhood of London; but there are scarcely any dairy pastures in any corner of it, if we except the estate of the duke of Norfolk in the parishes of Nudigate and Charlwood on the southern border. Lime and chalk are the principal manures used in the more remote districts. To the parts within its reach, London furnishes a never failing supply.

Cattle.—As there are no dairy farms, there seems not to be any breed of cattle in particular request. The sheep are of the South Down, the Wiltshire, and the Dorsetshire breeds. The latter are kept principally for rearing early house lambs for the London market. Grass lambs are reared in immense numbers to supply the markets in the months of April and May. Hogs are fed at the distilleries in great numbers.

They are imported from Berkshire, Shropshire, and the E. R. of Yorkshire. The Berkshire breed are generally preferred. The farmers keep, for the most part, hogs of this or of the Chinese breeds. At Budgwick, on the borders of Sussex, is a peculiar breed, which, when fattened, attain to an enormous size. Geese are fattened on the commons in the Weald in prodigious numbers; and at Dorking is a breed of fowls, said to be possessed of peculiarly profitable qualities.

Trees.—The principal woods are those of the Weald, which appears to have been formerly one entire forest. Many of the oaks here are of a large growth. The coppices consist of oak, birch, ash, chestnut, hazel, and alder. The produce is formed into hoops, poles for hop-gardens, hurdles, and faggots; great quantities are also made into charcoal for the gunpowder manufactories. Beech trees of great size are found on the chalk hills, and walnut trees of large growth are scattered over the county, though they are no where in great number. The box-tree, especially on Boxhill, near Dorking, attains a considerable size, and is eagerly sought after by the mathematical instrument makers, and the turners of London and Tunbridge. The county is particularly famous for yews in a wild state, scattered over its chalk hills, and for the immense growth of some that have been artificially planted. The birch thrives particularly on the heaths whence brooms are supplied for the market at Southwark. Larch and fir have been extensively planted on the heaths in the west parts of the county. Osiers are cultivated about Chertsey and Byfleet, and, in many places, common furze for fuel.

Rivers.—The rivers are the Thames, the Wey, and the Mole, with their numerous tributary streams. The Thames, forming the centre northern boundary of the county, first touches it at Egham, its north-western extremity, whence it flows south-east by Chertsey to its confluence with the Wey, after which it assumes an irregular north-easterly direction to Kew, passing with a bold south-easterly sweep by the town of Kingston and the village of Thames Ditton, to the village of Petersham and the bold heights of Richmond. From Kew it pursues an easterly course by Mortlake, Barnes, Putney, Wandsworth, and Battersea, then forming Chelsea-reach, it pours its majestic stream through the magnificent arches of the six bridges which connect the cities of London and Westminster with the borough of Southwark and the southern suburbs of that vast metropolis. To the east of the bridges it forms the Pool, or harbour of London, the most important port in the world. It quits the county between Rotherhithe and Deptford, as it approaches the superb pile of Greenwich hospital. Above the bridges it is navigable for barges of large burden during the whole of its course past this county. The Wey has its source in Hampshire, and enters Surrey on its south-western border near Frensham. It flows with an easterly course to Godalming, where it becomes navigable, and whence it flows in a north-easterly direction to the Thames. The Mole has its sources in Sussex, a few springs, the waters of which unite in the parish of Horley, to the south of Reigate, and pursue a south-westerly course for a considerable length through a flat uninteresting country. Approaching Dorking, it enters the venerable groves around Betchworth-castle, and winds through a romantic valley beneath the almost perpendicular height of Boxhill. From Dorking to Leatherhead, where it emerges from among the hills, its course is nearly north. At the latter place it turns to the north-west, passing the villages of Stoke and Cobham, beyond which it turns to the north-east, and by the way of Esher enters the Thames at East Molesey, opposite to Hampton-court. This river derives its name from the circumstance of its waters during seasons of drought being for a part of its course, in the neighbourhood of Dorking, swallowed up by the soil, leaving for a considerable distance its channel dry. After a subterraneous course of some miles, it emerges into day, and pursues its course as before. When the water is at its ordinary height, however, nothing of the kind is visible. The Wandle has its sources in the numerous springs of Croydon, aided by those of Carshalton, and by a northerly course of ten miles falls into the Thames at Wandsworth. The water of this stream is remarkably pure. A powerful stream, rising in the town of Ewell, falls into the Thames at Kingstou, and one of the head streams of the Medway has its fountains in the parishes of Gadstone and Horne, and passing through that of Lingfield, enters the county of Kent. The Loddon forms for ten miles of its early course the boundary of the county on the west. The Wey, it may be observed, is artificially rendered navigable, and is provided with locks, which are said to have been the first that were constructed in the kingdom. The bill for forming this navigation up to Guilford was obtained in 1651. The Basingstoke, the Grand Surrey, and the Croydon canals, connect different parts of the county with the Wey and the Thames, and contribute in a material degree to the general prosperity of the county. Several artificial lakes have been formed on the heaths in the western parts of the county, in which fish, chiefly carp, are fed for the London market; some of these ponds, as they are called, cover an extent of 150 acres.

Manufactures.—Though not by any means a manufacturing county, Surrey has several very important manufactures on the banks of the Wandle. Besides extensive bleaching and calico printing works, there are nearly a hundred mills in the short distance of ten miles. On the Mole there are a number of flour mills, several iron mills at Cobham and at Ember. Powder mills have been established at Maldon on a large scale, and on the tributary branches of the Wey there are numerous paper mills. All kinds of hosiery are manufactured at Godalming. At Guilford there is a saw mill upon a large scale, and at Mortlake a manufactory of delft and stone ware. At Battersea and Lambeth are distilleries upon the largest scale, and Southwark and its vicinity share largely in the varied trade of the port of London. The mineral productions of the county are chiefly chalk, limestone, freestone, fuller's earth, and fine sand, in all of which there is a considerable traffic carried on.

History.—Before the Roman invasion, Surrey was inhabited by the Regni, or Rhemi. Under the Romans it was included in the province of Britannia Prima. The Ermin-street crossed the county. On this street was situated the station Noviomagus, probably at Holwood-hill, said to have been the capital of the British Regni. Traces of a Roman camp remain at Walton-upon-Thames, near which Cæsar is supposed to have forded the Thames in his second expedition to Britain. After the conquest of the country by the Anglo-Saxons, Surrey seems to have formed a distinct state called South-rudge, or the southern kingdom, in reference to its situation on the south bank of the Thames, whence its present name. It seems to have been at an early period included in the kingdom of Wessex. It suffered exceedingly in the incursions of the Danes, and has been often the scene of intestine strife during the early ages of English history. Runymede, in this county, will be for ever famous as the place where John was compelled to sign the great charter, out of which have sprung the incalculable benefits of British liberty. The most remarkable ancient edifice in the county is the archiepiscopal palace at Lambeth, and there are some remains of another palace that belonged to his grace of Canterbury at Croydon. The number of religious houses in Surrey, previous to the dissolution, was twenty-six. Of these interesting establishments there are still a number of remains, descriptions of which will be found under their proper designations, or under that of the parishes or towns in which they are situated.

Divisions, &c.—Surrey, with the exception of nine parishes included in the deanery of Croydon, is in the diocese of Winchester and province of Canterbury. It forms an arch-deaconry, in which are the deaneries of Ewell, Southworth, and Stoke. The number of parishes is 141, of which 79 are rectories and 84 vicarages. The remainder are curacies. For civil purposes it is divided into fourteen hundreds, all of them, Farnham excepted, having two divisions. It contains the borough and market town of Southwark, with its populous suburban parishes. The borough and market towns of Guildford, Haslemere, and Reigate, the boroughs of Betchingly and Gatton, with the market towns of Chertsey, Croydon, Dorking, Farnham, Godalming, and Kingston. Formerly it sent two members to parliament for the shire, and two for each of the boroughs. By the reform act, Betchingly, Gatton, and Haslemere, have been disfranchised, and Reigate allowed only one member. The county itself now returns four members: namely, two for the eastern division, who are elected at Croydon; and two for the western, who are elected at Guildford. It is included in the home circuit. The assizes are held, the Lent and winter ones at Kingston, the summer at Croydon and Guildford alternately. The quarter sessions are held successively at Newington, Reigate, Guildford, and Kingston. Pop., in 1801, 269,043; in 1831, 485,700. A. P., £1,579,173.

SUSSEX,

A maritime county, bounded on the west by Southamptonshire; on the north by Surrey; on the north-east and east by Kent; and on the south by the English channel. Its extreme length from east to west is about 76 miles; its breadth from north to south about 20. Its area has been computed at upwards of 1463 square miles, or about 986,320 statute acres.

Physical Features.—The South Downs, an open range of chalk hills extending into the county from Hampshire, and stretching nearly its whole length in an easterly direction, form the most remarkable feature in the scenery of Sussex. Broken and precipitous on the north, these hills have yet on the south a gradual descent, except in the vicinity of Brighton, where, approaching the sea, they form a shore broken into tremendous cliffs, terminated on the east by Beechy-head, a promontory rising to the height of 564 feet above the strand, being the most elevated point on the south coast of England, with the exception of Sealea-Bill and the rocks of Hastings; the remainder of the extensive coast of the county is flat, though rocky and edged with sandbanks. Its harbours are of course small, and have little depth of water. Rye, Winchelsea, Hastings, and Seaford, are members of the Cinque ports. Winchelsea, however, and Seaford, have been nearly closed, and Rye and Hastings much injured by the shifting sands thrown in by the tide. The other ports on the coast are Newhaven, Brighton, Shoreham, Arundel-port, or Little-Hampton, and Chichester. Westward of the Arun the downs afford but a coarse and scanty pasture, being overgrown with dwarf beeches, furze, &c., but to the east of that river nothing can exceed the fine smooth turf with which they are covered, yielding a great variety of the finest aromatic plants, which give to the mutton upon them that peculiarly fine flavour for which it is universally admired. Between the downs and the sea lies a richly cultivated vale, in length upwards of 36 miles, and varying in breadth from less than one mile in the eastern part to six and seven in the western. Extensive tracts of marsh land lie between the eastern extremity of the downs and the sea near Beechy-head, and in the vicinity of Rye, on the confines of Kent. Others of the same kind lie near the mouth of the Ouse, the Arun, and the Adour. Of the extensive district called the Weald, a large portion lies in Sussex, and of this, a considerable tract in the north-east of the county is completely barren. Upon the whole, the aspect of Sussex very much resembles that of Surrey, only its maritime districts, especially the downs, command a wide expanse of sea, perpetually studded with numberless vessels of all descriptions, and terminated on the west by the isle of Wight. The climate in the western maritime tracts is peculiarly mild, and exceedingly favourable to vegetation. That of the downs is also mild, but being exposed to the westerly and south-westerly winds, which often blow with extreme violence, the crops are liable to considerable uncertainty. The spray, which dashes on the coast with great fury, is sometimes carried on the gales over a wide extent of the adjacent lands, and by its saline qualities destroys the vegetation upon the hedges and trees, and even penetrates the walls of the houses which are not by some means sheltered from its effects.

Soils.—The different soils are chalk, clay, sand, loam, and gravel. The first is that of the downs, which, though in its natural state a rich light hazel mould lying upon a substratum of loose chalk covering the solid chalk rock, is, by the action of the plough, mixed with that mineral so as to be rather a chalk than a hazel mould. At the base of the downs the soil is every where good, and of a sufficient depth for the action of the plough, but along the summits it is flints covered with a thin turf. Between the downs and the Weald is a stripe of very rich calcareous loam, lying on a stratum of pure clay. The beautiful and extensive vale lying to the south of the downs is altogether a rich loam, though in some spots mingled with sand. A stripe intervenes between this and the foot of the chalk hills, upon which turnips thrive exceedingly. Its surface is covered with flints so as nearly to hide the mould. Vegetation, however, among these beds of stone flourishes with singular luxuriance. The Weald, as we have already remarked in describing Surrey, is a stiff clay. In the hills which belong to it, stretching themselves into the north-east portion of this county, the soil is a thin sandy loam resting upon gritstone, or a poor black sand resting upon clay. A long line of these poor sandy tracts extends from Kent along the north of the county and far into Hampshire. The soil of the marshes is composed of decayed vegetables and sand deposited by inundations, resting upon silt, or sea sand. With the exception of the downs and the wastes on its northern border, the county is enclosed with beautiful hedgerows.

Produce.—The rotation of crops being regulated by the nature of the soil, are very different in different places. In the Weald the common system is fallow, followed by two crops of corn and one of clover. A valuable species of wheat called Chidam or hedge wheat, takes its name from Chidam in this county, where it was first cultivated. The plant from which the seed was taken, was found growing wild in a hedge in that neighbourhood, from which circumstance it has also the name of hedge-wheat. Oats grow to great perfection in the Weald, and are extensively sown. Beans are seldom sown. Pease on the downs, and in the maritime districts, are universally cultivated, and with great success. Tares are pretty generally, as green food for cattle and horses, and upon the downs, colseeded, barley, and rye are widely cultivated, and in great estimation as green food for sheep. Turnips are also extensively cultivated as winter and spring food for the flocks. Potatoes, especially in the neighbourhood of Battle, Eastbourne, and Chichester, are extensively planted and yield large returns. They are chiefly applied to the fattening of cattle. The artificial grasses are red and white clover, trefoil, ryegrass, lucerne, and sainfoin. In the east and north-east of the county, hops are pretty generally cultivated. In the west part of the county, particularly on the Lavant, there are extensive tracts of irrigated meadows, which are mown once a year, and afterwards pastured. The marshes of this county have been greatly improved and are admirable in their kind, and perhaps, upon the whole, the most profitable land in the county. They are, however, liable to be flooded, and if they happen to be so during the summer months, which is sometimes the case, the whole crop is lost for that year, no kind of cattle being found that will eat the herbage after being thus overflowed. Of this marsh land, there are upwards of 30,000 acres in the county which are appropriated to the feeding of cattle and sheep. For cattle, the level of Pevensey is preferred. Those of Winchelsea and Rye are supposed to be better calculated for sheep. The manures most commonly used are chalk, chalk burned into lime, lime dug in the Weald, marl, which is abundant south of the Downs, and sea mud called sleech.

Cattle.—The Sussex breed of cattle is reckoned, for the purposes of the butcher, the very best in the kingdom. They are universally red, and have an uncommon tendency to fatten. They are not, however, great milkers, though what they give is said to be peculiarly rich. In a county where the dairy holds a very inferior place in rural economy, this is no great matter. The oxen are, in the first place, reared to perform the labours of the farm, and afterwards fattened for the butcher. When fully fed, the Sussex oxen weigh generally about 140 stone. Besides its breed of cattle, Sussex has also a breed of sheep—the South Down, one of the most celebrated in the kingdom. This breed has of late years been introduced into almost every county in the kingdom, and its excellence is everywhere acknowledged. The hogs of Sussex have a strong resemblance to those of Berkshire. The sandy wastes are many of them occupied by rabbit-warrens, from which large supplies are regularly sent to the London market. North Chapel and Hinford are famous for fowls, and the Weald furnishes the greater part of what are sold for Dorking fowls. Horsham is the principal market for these fowls.

Trees.—Sussex is not remarkable for fruit-trees, though orchards are common south of the Downs, and considerable quantities of cider are made chiefly for home consumption; but for forest trees, especially oak, it has been celebrated from time immemorial. The extent of its woodlands, nearly all of them included in the Weald, is calculated at upwards of 170,000 acres, and the timber produced in them is preferred by the navy contractors, to that of any other district. The coppices contain oak, ash, beech, Spanish chestnut, willow, maple, and white and red birch; on the sands, there are birch, hazel, and beech. The produce is em-played principally as hop-poles, and for fuel. Wood seems to be the principal fuel of the lower orders, in some places turf.

Rivers.—The rivers of Sussex—having their sources within the county, and running with a pretty direct course to the sea—are but of little consequence. They are the Arun, with its tributary the Rother, the Ouse, the Adur, and the Lavant. The Arun rises in St Leonard's forest, flows to the westward by Horsham, thence turning south it receives the Rother, which joins it from the west near the village of Stopham, and passing the town of Arundel, flows by a serpentine course through a rich and extensive marsh tract into the sea at Little Hampton. The tide flows up this river for 17 miles, and with the aid of a few artificial cuts, it is navigable for barges of 30 tons burden, as far up as Newbridge. With similar assistance the Rother is navigated as high as the town of Midhurst. The Arun is famous for mullets, which in the summer season come up it in large shoals as far as the town of Arundel. It is celebrated also for trout and eels. The Ouse is formed by the junction of two streams to the east of Cuckfield, whence flowing first to the east and afterwards south by the town of Lewes, it falls into the sea at Newhaven. It has been made navigable for small vessels as far up nearly as Cuckfield. The Adur, called also the Beeding, has its source in St Leonard's-Forest, flows southward by Steyning and Bramber, to Shoreham, where it takes an easterly direction, and flowing parallel with the coast and at no great distance from it, falls into the sea a little to the west of Brighton. It is navigable for ships up to Shoreham, and for barges to the village of Ashurst. The Rother rises in the forest of Ashdown, whence flowing east it becomes the boundary between Sussex and Kent. Passing the isle of Oxney in the latter county, it suddenly turns to the south, and crossing the eastern extremity of Sussex, expands into an estuary, by which it falls into the sea, after forming the harbour of Rye. It is navigable as far up as Newenden. The Lavant, a smaller stream than any of the preceding, but rendered immortal by the name of Collins, rises in the chalk hills near East Dean, and flowing south by Chichester, enters the sea by a broad estuary between the village of Wittering and the south-east point of Hayling island, in Southamptonsire. Lobsters of a peculiar excellent quality are found in the mouth of this river. The shores of this south-west part of the county are rendered very irregular by several arms of the sea, one of which separates the island of Thorney from the rest of the county. One of the four streams, which united within the county of Kent, form the Medway, has its source in the north-east part of this county. A canal, commencing below the town of Arundel, connects the Arun with the Lavant, from which the navigation is continued through the channels which separate Thorney and Hayling islands from the mainland, to the east side of Portsea island, where the artificial navigation again commences, and proceeds across that island to Portsmouth.

Minerals, &c.—The mineral productions of Sussex are limestone of various kinds, ironstone, sandstone, red ochre, fuller's earth, &c. Of the limestone, one species is the Sussex marble, frequently used for chimney pieces. Much of it was employed in building the cathedral at Canterbury, where it is called Petworth marble, being found in the neighbourhood of that town in the greatest perfection. Limestone, and ironstone in contact with it, often rise to within a few feet of the surface. In the Weald, sandstone and ironstone occur everywhere, and underneath them numerous strata of limestone, which, when burned, makes the best cement of any in the kingdom. The sandstone is in general friable; in some places it is fit for the purposes of masonry. The ironstone is of various qualities, and was at one time extensively worked. By the establishment of ironworks in the coal districts of the middle and north counties, and the decay of fuel from the diminution of the woods, the works here have been abandoned. From the woods, however, charcoal is still made in considerable quantity, chiefly for the manufacture of gunpowder. Potash is also made at Petworth, for the soap-boilers of that town. Bricks are made in many places of the county, and also tiles, which are sent to the West Indies. Ship and boat building is carried on upon a small scale in some of the ports, and timber, cordwood, charcoal, and oak bark are exported. Its agricultural exports are corn, cattle, sheep, hides, and wool. The woollen manufacture is carried on upon a limited scale at Chichester, and there are paper mills in several places. Upon the coast are caught herrings, mackerel, and flat fish, which are sent to the London market. Artificial lakes, used as fish ponds, are numerous in the Weald, in which are bred carp, tench, perch, pike, and eels, for the London market.

History.—Sussex, which formed part of the territory of the Regni, was by the Romans included in the division Britannia Prima, and here, after the departure of that people, Ella the Saxon landed with his three sons and a considerable number of followers in the year 477, and by the capture of Anderida, the capital of the Regni, laid the foundation of the kingdom of the South Saxons, called in Saxon Suth Seaxe, contracted into the modern name Sussex. About the year 728, this kingdom was united by conquest to the kingdom of Wessex. By the inroads of the Danes Sussex was often laid nearly waste. Its coasts were cruelly ravaged in 1051 by Godwin, earl of Kent, and on the 29th of September, 1066, William, duke of Normandy, in his way to invade England, arrived in Pevensey-bay with a fleet of 900 sail. Landing his troops, William came to an engagement with his opponents on the 14th of October, at a place called Epiton, but ever since, Battle. A decisive battle was fought at Lewes in this county on the 14th of May, 1264, between the forces of Henry III. and those of his barons, in which the king and his son Prince Edward were made prisoners. Two years after this, Prince Edward attacked and carried by storm the town of Winchelsea. In a few years more a terrible storm choked up the harbours of Rye and Old Winchelsea. By this tempest the mouth of the Rother was closed and its course totally changed. Since that period the county has often been disturbed by inroads of the French and Spaniards, sometimes united and sometimes singly. In the great civil war, the friends of Charles I. in this county exerted themselves with great zeal in his behalf, but with no better success than elsewhere, and it was from Shoreham in this county that Charles II., after the battle of Worcester, embarked on board a coal vessel which landed him at Foscamp in Normandy.

Divisions.—Sussex is co-extensive with the diocese of Chichester, in the province of Canterbury, and is divided into the archdeaconries of Chichester and Lewes. The former comprises the deaneries of Arundel, Boxgrove, Chichester, Midhurst, Storrington, and locally Pagham, the latter those of Dallington, Hastings, Lewes, Pevensey, and locally South Malling. The total number of parishes is 300, of which 157 are rectories, 127 are vicarages, and the remainder, three excepted which have both a rectory and a vicarage, perpetual curacies. For civil purposes, the county is divided into six rapes, which are again subdivided into hundreds. It contains the city and port of Chichester—members of the Cinque ports, Hastings, Rye, Seaford, and Winchelsea, the last and the two first being also market towns, Horsham, a seaport, borough, and market town, the borough and market towns of Arundel, East Grinstead, Lewes, Midhurst, Shoreham, and Steyning, the borough of Bramber, the market town and seaports of Brighton and Hastings, with the market towns of Cuckfield, Hailsham, Little Hampton, Petworth, and Worthing. Four members are now returned to parliament for this county. The two for the eastern division are elected at Lewes; those for the western at Chichester. The eastern division includes the several rapes of Lewes, Hastings, and Pevensey. The rapes of Arundel, Bramber, and Chichester, form the western division. By the reform bill, Seaford and Winchelsea, members of the Cinque ports, East Grinstead, Bramber, and Steyning, have been disfranchised, while Midhurst, Horsham, Arundel, and Rye, have been reduced to the sending only of one member each. The county belongs to the home circuit. The county jails are at Lewes and Horsham, the former being also a house of correction. The summer and winter assizes meet at Lewes, the Lent at Horsham. The quarter sessions are held at Petworth, Horsham, Lewes, and Chichester.

Antiquities.—Numerous antiquities are to be met with in this county, Roman roads, encampments, &c. which will be found under the towns or parishes in which they are situated. The number of religious houses in the county at the time of the dissolution, including hospitals, colleges, &c. was fifty-eight. Of some of these the remains are singularly magnificent, especially that of Battle, founded by William the Conqueror to commemorate his victory over Harold. Byham is also worthy of particular notice. Here likewise are many splendid seats of the nobility and gentry, such as Brighton, which was a favourite seat of his late majesty, George IV.—Arundel-castle, a seat of the duke of Norfolk,—Petworth-park, the seat of the earl of Egremont,—Goodwood, that of the duke of Richmond,—Eridge-castle, that of the earl of Abergavenny,—Sheffield-park, that of the earl of Sheffield,—Slindon-house, that of the earl of Newburgh,—Stanmer-park, that of the earl of Chichester, &c. Sussex gives the title of duke to Prince Augustus Frederick, sixth son of George III. Pop., in 1801, 159,311; in 1831, 272,300.

SUTTON, a chapelry in the parish of Castor, co. of Northampton. Living, a curacy to the rectory of Castor, a peculiar in the dio. of Peterborough, not in charge. Chapel ded. to St Michael. Patron, the rector of Castor. This chapelry is watered by the Nene, and it has a quarry of excellent stone. Distance from Wandsworth, 2 m. E.S.E. Pop., in 1801, 110; in 1831, 118. A. P., £851.

SUTTON, a hamlet in the parish of Granby, co. of Nottingham, 10 m. E. from Nottingham. Pop. with the parish.

SUTTON, a parish in the liberty of Southwell and Scrooby, co. of Nottingham. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Nottingham and dio. of York, rated at £10. Church ded. to St Bartholomew. Patron, in 1829, the duke of Portland. The Idle runs through this parish, and the village is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of the court held there for the recovery of small debts. Here is a school endowed with waste lands which now yield about £28 per annum. Distance from East-Retford, $3\frac{1}{4}$ m. N.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 551; in 1831, 601. A. P., £4,199.

SUTTON, a division in the parish of Diddlebury, co. of Salop, 6 m. N. from Ludlow. Pop. with the parish.

SUTTON, a parish in the liberty of the town of Shrewsbury, co. of Salop. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Hereford, rated at £3. Church ded. to St John. Patron, in 1829, Lord Berwick. Here is a fine spring issuing from a stratum of ash-coloured clay, possessing nearly the properties of sea water. It is considered an excellent medicine in cases of scrofula. Distance from Shrewsbury, 2 m.

S.E. Pop., in 1801, 45; in 1831, 61. A. P., £978.

SUTTON, a tything in the parish of Ditchet, 2 m. N.W. from Castle-Cary. Pop. with the parish.

SUTTON, a parish in the hundred of Wilford, co. of Suffolk. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich, rated at £8 2s. 1d. Church ded. to All Saints. Patron, in 1829, the Rev. Robert Field. The Deben bounds this parish on the west, where there is a ferry to Woodford. The Baptists have here a place of worship. Distances from Woodbridge, 3½ m. E.S.E. Pop., in 1801, 425; in 1831, 680. A. P., £3,231.

SUTTON, a parish in the hundred of Wallington, co. of Surrey. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Surrey and dio. of Winchester, rated at £16 18s. 4d. Church ded. to St Nicholas. Patron, in 1829, Miss Watford. The Wey and Arun canal passes through this parish. The Independents have here a place of worship, and there are several bequests for the educating of poor children. Mary Gibson left £500, the interest to be divided between the rector, the parish-clerk, and the church-wardens, on condition, that annually on the 12th of August the mausoleum of her family be opened and inspected by them, and that they then repair to the church to hear a sermon preached by the rector. Distance from Ewel, 3 m. E.N.E. Pop., in 1801, 579; in 1831, 1121. A. P., £3,735.

The church—a handsome Gothic structure, consisting of a nave, chancel, and side aisles, with a square tower, in which is a clock, six bells, and musical chimes—is ded. to the Holy Trinity. Patron, in 1829, the Rev. R. Bedford. This town, which is well built, and contains many elegant mansions, derives its appellation from a very bleak and cheerless tract of land on the south-west borders of the county, communicating with Staffordshire. This wild district comprises an extent of 13,000 acres, and is called, very appropriately, the Cold Field. The inhabitants are chiefly occupied in the making of spades, saws, axes, and other implements employed in the agricultural and handicraft professions. The parish is intersected by the Birmingham and Fazley canal. The market-day is Monday; and there are fairs for cattle, sheep, and pedlery, on Trinity-Monday and November 8th. The town is governed by a corporation, consisting of a warden, two capital burgesses, and 22 other corporate members. The warden, who is chosen annually, and the capital burgesses for life, by their own body, are justices of the peace by virtue of their offices. The warden acts as coroner for the town manor, and for the lordship of Sutton. The corporation are lords of the manor, and elect a lord-high-steward and park keepers. The former appoints his deputy, who must be a lawyer, and presides at the courts leet and baron. The inhabitants are free and eligible to office by residence. Petty sessions are held once a quarter. The free grammar school was founded by Bishop Vessey in the reign of Henry VIII., and endowed with lands in the parish, from which the master derives a salary of from £3 to 400 per annum. A handsome house has in addition been erected for him by the corporation, on the condition that he teaches 24 poor boys additionally, in reading and writing. A national school is supported by the corporation, in which are educated upwards of 200 children of both sexes, who are also clothed at the expense of the corporation. There are almshouses for five aged men and five aged women, with gardens attached to them, supported by the corporation. Among other benefactions, there are four of £24 each, annually given as marriage portions to four poor maidens, natives of the place, or long resident. Every inhabitant has the right to pasture cattle in a finely wooded park attached to the town, on the payment of a small sum to the corporation. Distance from Warwick, 26 m. N.W.; from London, 110 m. N.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 2847; in 1831, 3684. A. P., £15,827.

SWAFFHAM, a market town and parish in the hundred of South Greenhoe, co. of Norfolk. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich, rated at £14 5s. 10d. The church—which consists of a nave, two aisles, two transepts on the south, and one on the north side, with a lofty tower surmounted with rich embrasures and purled pinnacles—is ded. to St Peter and St Paul. Patron, the bishop of Norwich. This town, which is remarkable for the salubrity of its air and the longevity of its inhabitants, is situated on an eminence, and commands a most delightful view of the surrounding country. Of the principal streets, four in number, the houses are well built, and there is an abundant supply of spring water. In the centre of the town is a large area in which is a fine piece of water. A handsome cross was erected on Market-hill by the late earl of Orford, and more recently a neat theatre and assembly rooms. A heath extending to some thousands of acres on the north-west side of the town, affords ample scope for the diversions of horse-racing and coursing. For the latter amusement, greyhounds are annually entered here in the month of September, under the same restrictions as race-horses. A charter was obtained from King John by one of the earls of Richmond, who were formerly lords of the manor, for a weekly market on Saturday, and two annual fairs, May 12th and July 21st, to which another has been added, November 3d. Petty sessions are held weekly by the county magistrates, and general quarter sessions at Midsummer. Manorial courts leet and baron are held annually in April or May. The earl of Richmond had anciently a prison in the town. A house of correction was erected in the reign of Elizabeth. A bridewell has been latterly erected, to which a tread-mill and a handsome residence for the governor has been added. Here is also a chapel attached to the establishment, and a chaplain with a salary of £200 per annum. In ancient times there was here a free chapel dedicated to St Mary, and at a hamlet a short way distant, called Guthlac's Stow, now Goodluck's-Close, another ded. to St Guthlac. Here are places of worship for the Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists. Here is a grammar school with a considerable endowment, and a national school is supported by subscription. A number of houses have been left at different times as residences, rent free, for the poor, for whom there is also a work-house. John de Swaffham, the bitter and bigotted opponent of Wickliffe, for his bigotry promoted by Pope Gregory II. to the see of Bangor, was a native of this town. Distance from Norfolk, 28 m. N.W.; from London, 95 m. N.N.E. Pop., in 1801, 2220; in 1831, 3285. A. P., £11,218.

Church ded. to All Saints. Patron, the vicar of Shinfield. The celebrated Lord Clarendon wrote the history of the great rebellion at the manor house here, which was the property of his son, with whom he resided after his retirement from public life. Here is a place of worship for the Wesleyan Methodists. Distance from Reading, 6 m. S.E. Pop., in 1801, 890; in 1831, 1106. A. P., £3,831.

SWALWELL, a township in the parish of Whickham, co.-palatine of Durham, the seat of extensive iron works, established in 1690, by Sir Ambrose Crawley, originally a common blacksmith. At these works, now carried on under the firm of Crawley, Millington & Co., are manufactured all manner of articles, either in cast or wrought iron. They are still conducted on the admirable system of the benevolent founder, who left sufficient funds for educating the children of the workmen, and for supporting their widows and orphans, at the same time that he laid down rules for the regulation of their conduct. There is here a Presbyterian meeting-house and a Methodist chapel. Shield, the well-known musical composer, was a native of this township. Distance from Gateshead, 4 m. W. Pop., in 1801, returned with the parish; in 1831, 1372. A. P. not returned separately.

SWANAGE, a market-town and parish in the hundred of Rowbarrow, Blandford (South) division of the co. of Dorset. The living is a rectory in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, rated at £27 9s. 9½d. The church—which is very ancient, with a large chancel and a lofty tower, and was formerly a chapel to the vicarage of Worth-Matravers—is ded. to the Virgin Mary. Patron, in 1829, John Calcraft, Esq. The town, which is situated on the small bay of Swanage, consists principally of one street, nearly a mile in length. It contains many good houses, for the most part built and roofed with stone. The bay of Swanage has of late years become a favourite bathing place, which has contributed in a material degree to the increase and the general improvement of the town. The manufacture of straw-plait employs many of the females, but the staple employment of the men is quarrying freestone, called Purbeck stone, which is sent to many parts of our own, and even of distant kingdoms. The quarrymen have long been governed by local regulations of their own making, by which, none but sons of quarrymen are allowed to enter the quarries, nor even these, except they have served an apprenticeship with their fathers, or some of their neighbours, for seven years. What are the practical results of this regulation we are not informed, but it is a subject into which the economist and the politician ought to inquire. The bay of Swanage serves for a harbour to the town, and affords tolerable anchorage for vessels of 300 tons burden. The town has a market on Tuesday and on Friday. Fossil fishes are found in the quarries here, especially bream, in great abundance; and there are several mineral springs in the parish, celebrated for their medicinal virtues. Distance from Corfe-Castle, 7 m. E.S.E.; from London, 122. Pop., in 1801, 1382; in 1831, 1734. A. P., £2,102.

Pop., in 1801, 529; in 1831, 668. A. P., £4,505.

SWANLAND, a township in the parish of North-Ferriby, E. R., co. of York, 6½ m. W.S.W. from Kingston-upon-Hull. Pop., in 1801, 321; in 1831, 366. A. P., £4,811.

SWANNINGTON, a chapelry in the parish of Whitwick, co. of Leicester. Living, a curacy to the vicarage of Whitwick, in the archd. of Leicester and dio. of Lincoln, not in charge. Patron, the vicar of Whitwick. Here is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Distance from Ashby-de-la-Zouch, 4 m. E.S.E. Pop., in 1801, 486; in 1831, 549. A. P., £2,497.

SWANNINGTON, a parish in the hundred of Eynesford, co. of Norfolk. Living, a rectory with that of Wood-Dalling, in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich, rated at £6 11s. 5d., returned at £86 12s. 11d. Church ded. to St Margaret. Patrons, the master and fellows of Trinity-Hall, Cambridge. Distance from Reepham, 4 m. S.E. Pop., in 1801, 299; in 1831, 370. A. P., £1,368.

SWANSCOMBE, a parish in the hundred of Axton, lathe of Sutton-at-Hone, co. of Kent. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Rochester, rated at £25 13s. 4d. Church ded. to St Peter and St Paul. Patrons, the master and fellows of Sidney college, Cambridge. This parish, which is in general highly picturesque, is bounded on the north by the Thames, and is celebrated as the place where the men of Kent arrested the march of William the Conqueror till he consented to confirm them in their ancient rights and privileges, and also as the landing-place of Sweyn, king of Denmark. Distance from Dartford, 4 m. E.S.R. Pop., in 1801, 763; in 1831, 1166. A. P., £3,564.

SWANSEA, or ABER-TAUY, a sea-port town and parish in the hundred of Swansea, co. of Glamorgan, South Wales. The livings are two—St Mary's and St John's—both in the dio. of St David's, the former rated at £7 14s. 4½d., the latter returned at £51. The parish of St John's does not commence till a mile out of the town, and it extends one mile farther. The church of St Mary is 74 feet in length, and 54 in width, and is ornamented with a lofty square tower. St John's, situated at the upper end of the town, and originally a chapel to the Knights of St John of Jerusalem, is of much smaller dimensions. The chapel of St Thomas, which was situated in the parish of St Mary, has been wholly washed away by the sea. The town is well built; the streets broad, paved, and having flagged foot-paths, and lighted with gas. Of the ancient castle, the only part remaining entire is a massive quadrangular tower, surmounted by a parapet pierced with light circular arches. Of the castle itself, part is occupied by the town poor-house, and part by the town-prison; and the town-hall, a handsome modern building, stands within its inclosure. From the summit of the ancient tower the view is particularly fine, taking in the whole town, imbosomed in hills that rise behind it to the west and north, with the beautiful semicircular bay of Swansea fading away in the distance, where its waters become undistinguishable from those of the Bristol channel. A neat and commodious theatre has been built by tontine shares of £10 each, and elegant assembly-rooms have been erected by funds raised in shares of £8 each. There are two reading and news-rooms, and the town has an ably-conducted and extensively circulated journal. In consequence of recent improvements, the harbour of Swansea is now not only one of the most beautiful, but one of the most secure in the kingdom. Two fine piers confine the channel on the east and west sides, and the bed of the river has been deepened, so that vessels of 300 tons burden receive their cargoes at the wharfs along its banks. On the western pier are a watch-house and light-house, with a fine terrace, which commands a most delightful view of the bay, the town, and the surrounding country, which is rich in minerals, and sustains a vast population. The principal business carried on here is the smelting of copper, the ore of which is brought here from different places of the principality, from Cornwall, and from Ireland. There are also several large iron-foundries, a number of potteries, roperies, breweries, tan-series, soaperies, &c. The trade in coal is very great, and employs a vast number of people. The coals are brought to the town and harbour by means of canals, and a rail-road passes along the shore from the pier to the Mumbles. The atmosphere of Swansea is supposed to be peculiarly salubrious, which, with the fine beach, and the panoramic beauty of the bay, have rendered it a favourite resort for sea-bathing, and large additions have been made to the town for the accommodation of summer visitors. The borough has three component parts—the town, the franchise, and the parish—each of which, for parochial purposes, has its own officers. The area of the whole is about 7600 acres. The corporation is governed by a port-reeve, 12 aldermen, two common attorneys, a recorder, two sergeants-at-mace, and an unlimited number of burgesses. Courts leet are held twice in the year, and a court of pleas for the recovery of small debts once every three weeks. The petty sessions for the hundred, and the Michaelmas quarter sessions for the county, are held here. Swansea unites with Loughor, Neath, Aberavon, and Kenfig, in the electing of one member of parliament. Here are 16 dissenting meeting-houses, including one Catholic chapel. Here is a free school endowed with £40 per annum, to which the corporation add annually £20, making the income £60 per annum. There are many private schools, and several charity schools, conducted upon the national and Lancasterian plans. An infirmary and a dispensary are liberally supported. The poet Gower, who was contemporary with Chaucer, is supposed to have been a native of this town, as was the celebrated Bean Nash, who was for many years master of the ceremonies at Bath. Distance from London, 206 m. W. Pop., in 1801, of the town and franchise, 6099; of the remainder of the parish, 732: in 1831, of the former, 13,256; of the latter, 1675. A. P. of the town and franchise, £29,184; of the remainder of the parish, £3,376.

to the Holy Rood. Patron, the king. The town is situated on the summit of a considerable eminence, and commands delightful views over parts of Berkshire and Gloucestershire. The principal street is wide and contains many good houses. No particular manufacture is carried on here; but the extensive quarries that are wrought in the neighbourhood, and the pursuits of husbandry, afford sufficient employment to the inhabitants, a great proportion of whom are in easy circumstances. The market is on Monday for corn, and on every second Monday for cattle. Fairs are held on the Monday before April 5th, the second Monday after May 12th, the second Monday in September, and the second Monday after September 11th, for cattle, pedlery, &c. The petty-sessions for the division are held here. The Wilts and Berkshire canal passes about half a mile from the town. Here are places of worship for the Independents and the Wesleyan Methodists, and there is a free school with an endowment of about £40 per annum, which is aided by voluntary contributions. Distance from London, 81 m. W. Pop., in 1801, 1198; in 1831, 1742. A. P., £7,818.

SWINDON, a township partly in the parish of Pannall, lower division, and partly in that of Kirkby-Overblows, upper division of the wapentake of Claro, W. R., co. of York. It is 6 m. W.S.W. from Wetherby, and in the peculiar jurisdiction of the honour court of Knaresborough. Pop., in 1801, returned with the parish of Pannall; in 1831, 46. A. P. with the parish of Pannall.

SWINE, a parish and township in the middle division of the wapentake of Holderness, E. R., co. of York. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of the E. R. and dio. of York, rated at £8, returned at £54. Church ded. to St Mary. Patron, in 1829, William Wilberforce, Esq. Here was a Cistercian nunnery dedicated to the Blessed Virgin Mary, the revenues of which at the dissolution were estimated at £134 6s. 9d. Distance from Kingston-upon-Hull, 6½ m. N.N.E. SWINESHEAD, a market-town and parish in the wapentake of Kirtou, parts of Holland, co. of Lincoln. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £14

9s., returned at £184 18s. Church ded. to St Mary. Patrons, the master and fellows of Trinity college, Cambridge. This town is famous as having been the first resting place of King John, after he had lost the whole of his baggage, and narrowly escaped with his life, when crossing the marshes in his military progress from Lynn to Sleaford. He left this town on horseback, but being suddenly taken ill with a dysentery, was carried in a litter to Sleaford, and thence to his castle of Newark, where he died on the following day. The sea formerly flowed up to the town, and there was a harbour near the market-place. The market-day is Thursday, but the market is no longer frequented. A fair is held October 2d. Here was a Cistercian priory, the revenues of which, at the dissolution, were estimated at £175 19s. 10d. The monastery has entirely disappeared. Its site is however still visible, and about 220 years ago a large mansion was erected with a part of its materials. This mansion is in good preservation, and has been recently modernised. A little to the north-west of the town is a Danish camp, and many ancient coins, skeletons, &c., have been at different times dug up in the neighbourhood of the monastery. Here is a free school, endowed with £35 per annum. Distance from Boston, 3 m. W.S.W. Pop., in 1801, 1544; in 1831, 1994. A. P., £11,796.

SWINESTEAD, a parish in the wapentake of Beltsloe, parts of Kesteven, co. of Lincoln. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £6 19s. 7d. Church ded. to St Mary. Patrons, in 1829, Baroness Willoughby and Lord Gwydyr. Here is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Distance from Corby, 2 m. E.S.E. Pop., in 1801, 306; in 1831, 402. A. P., £1,881.

SWINETHORPE, an extra-parochial liberty in the upper division of the wapentake of Boothby-Graffo, parts of Kesteven, co. of Lincoln, 8 m. W.S.W. from Lincoln. Pop., in 1801, 15; in 1831, 54. A. P., £785.

SWINFORD (KING'S), a parish in the north division of the hundred of Seisdon, co. of Stafford. The living is a rectory with the curacy of Briery-Hill annexed, in the archd. of Stafford and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, rated at £17 13s. 4d. Church ded. to St Mary. Patron, in 1829, Lord Dudley. The manufactures of this parish are chiefly iron and glass, in both which they are very extensive. The whole of this district abounds in coal and ironstone, and an excellent rail-road, with the Stroudwater and the Staffordshire and Worcester canals passing through the parish, afford every facility for import of the raw material, and for the export of the manufactured article. Holbeach-house, where Catesby and the other gunpowder conspirators were taken, is in this parish. On Ashwood-heath are the remains of a Roman camp, and Ladywell-Spa is partly in this parish. Distance from Stourbridge, 3 m. N.W. Pop., in 1801, 6464; in 1831, 15,156. A. P., £22,894.

SWINFORD (OLD), a parish, partly in the south division of the hundred of Seisdon, co. of Stafford, but principally in the lower division of the hundred of Halshire, co. of Worcester. The living is a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Worcester, rated at £26 6s. 6d. The church—which is an elegant Gothic structure, with a handsome spire—is ded. to St Mary. The principal business carried on here is the making of nails. The Blue-coat hospital, in this parish, was founded by Thomas Foley, Esq., in 1677, and endowed with estates now yielding upwards of £2000 per annum. It is a neat and commodious structure, in the college style, situated on the Bromsgrove road. It receives 70 boys, who are boarded, clothed, and educated. They are received between the ages of seven and eleven, and remain till they reach the age of fourteen, when they are apprenticed. At the expiry of their indenture, by producing a certificate of good conduct, they are presented with £15. Another school in the vicinity, endowed for educating, clothing, and apprenticing 20 boys, has been in some way joined with the Blue-coat hospital, and the children of both are taught by the same master. Distance from Stourbridge, 1 m. S.S.E. Pop., in 1801, 8199; in 1831, 13,874. A. P., £20,071.

SWINGFIELD, a parish in the hundred of Folkestone, lathe of Shepway, co. of Kent. Living, a curacy in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury, certified at £20, returned at £33. Church—ded. to St Peter—consists of a nave and chancel, with a square tower and beacon turret at the west end. Here was a preceptory of Knights Templars, which fell into the possession of the Knights of St John of Jerusalem, and possessed at the dissolution revenues to the amount of £87 3s. 8d. The remains of this once splendid establishment are now occupied as a farm-house. Distance from Folkestone, 5 m. N. Pop., in 1801, 215; in 1831, 262. A. P., £1,725.

SYDENHAM, a chapelry in the parish of Lewisham, co. of Kent. Living, a curacy to the vicarage of Lewisham. The church, which is but newly finished, was erected at the expense of upwards of £10,000, the greater part of which has been allowed by the parliamentary commissioners for building new churches. About 1640, this place came into public notice on account of mineral spring which was supposed to possess very peculiar virtues, and for the benefit of which invalids often came from a considerable distance. This in a short time raised the village from a cluster of paltry huts to the splendour of a town, which it still in some measure retains, though its waters have now nearly fallen into disuse. The air is reckoned to possess most salubrious qualities, the scenery is fine, and being in the vicinity of the metropolis, numerous families of respectability have made it their permanent residence. Sydenham common affords many charming views, and the adjoining woods are often frequented by parties of pleasure from the metropolis. The Croydon canal passes through the village, which is within the jurisdiction of a court of requests held alternately at Bromley and at Greenwich, for the recovery of small debts. A pleasure fair is held annually on Trinity-Monday, and is generally numerously attended. There is in aid of the established church a proprietary chapel, and there are places of worship for the Independents and the Wesleyan Methodists. A school conducted on the national system affords the means of instruction to about eighty children. Distance from London, 8½ m. S.S.E. Pop. with the parish.

liberties of Syerscote, and Tamworth-castle, and the extra-parochial liberty of Hopwas-Hayes. It was incorporated by Queen Elizabeth in the 3d of her reign, and is governed by two bailiffs, (one for each county,) 24 burgesses, recorder, town-clerk, &c., with a high steward and under-steward. This corporation hold a three weeks court of record, and an annual court-leet. The borough sends two members to parliament, the bailiffs being the returning officers. The electors under the old system are about 470 in number: the new electors 528.

Tamworth is said to be of great antiquity: it was made a royal residence by the Mercians. When Briton was invaded by the Danes, this town was nearly destroyed, but was rebuilt by Ethelfleda, daughter of Alfred the Great. "In the year 914, the famous Mercian Lady Elfleda re-edified this town, and toward the latter end of the century here was a convent of religious. Eadgitha, a relation of King Edgar's, is mentioned to have been abbess here; but that St Editha, the daughter of that king, founded a nunnery here, which was translated to Pollesworth after the conquest, is not so evident. However, it is most certain that the church here, dedicated to St Edith, hath been for a long time collegiate, having a dean and six prebendaries, and every one of them hath his substitute or vicar, but I could not learn, saith Leland, of whose erection the college was. Some think it was a college before the conquest; others that it was of the foundation of Marmion, and that opinion is more likely to be true. Marmions, without doubt, were the successive lords of the castle. The king is at present taken as patron of the college. The deanery was valued 28th Henry VIII., at £21 per annum. The first prebend at £3 6s. 8d.; the second at £8; the third at £8; the fourth at £7; the fifth at £10; the sixth at £—; and the common revenues at £4 7s. 8d. But the college, with all the prebends, were granted 23d Elizabeth, to Edward Downing and Peter Ashton. Here was an hospital ded. to St James."—Tanner's Not. Mon. It is now a handsome and populous place on the confluence of the rivers Tame and Anker, and near the great navigable canal. The principal manufactures are tanning, calico-printing, ale-brewing, and woollen-cloth. The market is on Saturday. Fairs, March 5th, May 4th, July 26th, October 24th, first Monday in September, and Monday before St Paul's day in January. The earl of Ferrers derives the title of Viscount Shirley from this town. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Stafford and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, certified at £16, and returned at £116. Patron, in 1829, C. E. Repington, Esq. The church, ded. to St Editha, is a noble and handsome structure surmounted by a tower, which has two curious spiral staircases. Here are places of worship for Independents, Baptists, Unitarians, Wesleyan Methodists, and Quakers. TATTENHOE, or TOTTENHOE, a parish in Cottesloe hundred, co. of Buckingham, 3½ m. W. from Fenny-Stratford. Living, a perpetual curacy, holden by institution as a rectory, in the archd. of Buckingham and dio. of Lincoln, endowed with £1000. Patron, in 1829, W. S. Lowndes, Esq. Pop., in 1801, 31; in 1831, 13. A. P., £672.

TATTERSHALL, a market-town and parish in the S. division of Gartree wapentake, parts of Lindsey, co. of Lincoln, 9 m. S.S.W. from Horncastle. Market on Tuesday. Fairs, May 15th, and every alternate Friday in spring, and Sept. 25th. Living, a perpetual curacy in the dio. of Lincoln, exempt from visitation, returned at £70. Patron, in 1829, E. Fortesque, Esq. The church—ded. to the Holy Trinity—is a spacious and elegant cruciform edifice, the choir of which was originally adorned with superbly painted windows, but these being removed to Burleigh chapel, and no others having been substituted, the interior of this magnificent structure has suffered greatly from the weather, &c. Before the altar are two brass effigies of Lord Cromwell and his wife, who, in 1438, made the church collegiate, and founded almshouses for 13 poor persons. The same nobleman also erected a castle, but this fortress shared the fate of many others during the parliamentary war. Here is a place of worship for Wesleyans, also a national school for 130 children. Pop., in 1801, 496; in 1831, 599. A. P., £3,622.

Pop. of the parish, in 1801, 620; in 1831, 356. A. P., £2,379.

TATTON, a township in Rosthern parish, co.-palatine of Chester, 2 m. N. from Nether-Knutsford. Pop., in 1801, 120; in 1831, 69.

TATTON (EAST AND WEST), small farms, partly in the parish of Buckland-Ripens, and partly in that of Portisham, co. of Dorset.

TATWICK, a hamlet in Swainswick parish, co. of Somerset, 4 m. N. by E. from Bath.

TATWORTH, a tything in Chard parish, co. of Somerset, 2 m. S. from Chard.

TAUNTON AND TAUNTON-DEAN, a hundred situated S.W. of Somersetshire, bordering on Devonshire, and containing 27 parishes, including the borough of Taunton. Pop., in 1831, 11,288.

TAUNTON, a prescriptive borough and market-town in the above hundred and co., 18 m. W. by S. from Somerton. It was first chartered by Charles I., and the charter renewed by Charles II., was forfeited in 1792, owing to the corporation having suffered a majority of members to die without filling up varancies, and a majority being necessary to swear in the officers, none could be legally chosen, and the town is now under the jurisdiction of the county magistrates; the bailiffs convening and presiding at public meetings, and the constables having the distribution of the public charities. The Lent assizes for the co., and the Michaelmas quarter-sessions are held here, and a court for recovering debts under £2. The markets are on Wednesday and Saturday. Fairs, June 17th and July 7th. This borough sends two members to parliament. Taunton comprises two parishes, viz. St James and St Mary Magdalene, both in the archd. of Taunton and dio. of Bath and Wells. The living of St James is a perpetual curacy, certified at £2 13s. 4d., returned at £100. Patron, in 1829, Sir T. B. Lethbridge, Bart. The living of St Mary Magdalene is a vicarage, rated at £20 3s. 4d., returned at £74 0s. 4d. Patron, in 1829, E. P. Portman, Esq. Here are places of worship for Independents, Baptists, Quakers, Unitarians, and Wesleyan Methodists. A Roman Catholic chapel has lately been erected.—“On the east part of this town was a priory of Black canons, erected by William Gifford, bishop of Winchester, temp. Hen. I., to the honour of St Peter and St Paul. It was valued, 26th Hen. VIII., at £286 8s. 10d. per ann. Dugd.; £438 9s. 10d. Speed; and granted, 36th Hen. VIII., to Matthew Colehurst. Here were also an ancient leper-house near the chapel of St Margaret; and a house of White, or Carmelite friars.”—Tanner’s Not. Mon. The free grammar school was founded in 1523 by Fox, bishop of Winchester. There is a school supported by voluntary subscription, in which 130 children are clothed and instructed, and there are two infant schools, and a school of industry. The East-gate almshouses were founded and endowed by R. Gray, Esq., for 10 men and 7 women, who receive 3 shillings weekly.—Huish’s almshouses are for “thirteen poor, needy, maimed, impotent, aged men,” one of whom reads prayers daily, and receives 7 shillings, and the rest 5 shillings a-week.—Hemley’s and Pope’s almshouses, and 17 other tenements, are also appropriated to the rent-free residence of the poor, but are without endowment.—Of various other charities the principal are the Eye infirmary and Somerset hospital. There are likewise several sums bequeathed for benevolent purposes.—The Taunton and Somerset institution has a valuable library, reading-room, and museum.—The theatre is a neat building, open two months in the year.—There is no prison in the town except a kind of bridewell, called the Nook; all debtors and criminals are sent to the county-gaols at Wilton and Ilchester.—The castle, supposed to have been erected by Gifford, bishop of Winchester, in the reign of Henry I., and to have belonged subsequently to his successors, now consists of a south front, gateway, and circular tower. Pop., in 1801, 5794; in 1831, 11,139. A. P., £26,955.

History.—This is a place of considerable antiquity, and the discovery of numerous coins, &c., have led to the conjecture that it was a Roman station. But the most authentic records refer to the octarchy, when Ina, king of the West Saxons, built a castle here, which was demolished by his Queen Ethelburga, and rebuilt in the reign of William the Conqueror. It was seized by Perkin Warbeck when he took possession of the town, but quickly abandoned on the approach of the royal army. It was held for parliament by the gallant Blake, against 10,000 troops under Lord Goring, in 1645. On the restoration, its walls were razed to the ground, and the whole fabric so completely demolished that even the site is unknown.

TAVERHAM, a hundred, N. of the city of Norwich, co. of Norfolk, containing 19 parishes, including Horsham. The pop., in 1831, was 7695.

TAVERHAM, a parish in the above hundred and co., 5½ m. N.W. from Norwich. Living, a rectory (in mediæ etes) in the archd. and dio. of Norwich, each rated at £4 2s. 8½d. Patrons, the bishop of Norwich and Mrs Branthwaite, alternately. Church ded. to St Edmund. Pop., in 1801, 201; in 1831, 191. A. P., £1,013.

TAVISTOCK, a hundred on the W. side of the co. of Devon, containing 3 parishes, including the borough of Tavistock.

TAVISTOCK, an ancient prescriptive borough, market-town, and parish, in the above hundred and co., 34 m. W.S.W. from Exeter. It is one of the four stannary towns, and is governed by a portreeve, annually elected at the manorial court-leet. This borough has sent two members regularly to parliament since the 23d of Edward I.; the electors are about 400 in number. The portreeve is the returning officer.—The town of Tavistock is irregularly built, but the approach from the Plymouth road is remarkably good; it is situated on the river Tavy, which is crossed by three bridges. The Tavistock canal forms a junction with the Tamar at Morwell-Ham quay. Many of the inhabitants are employed in the manufacture of serges and coarse linens, and many in the neighbouring mines. Tin, iron, lead, and manganese are found here, also the loadstone.—Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Totness and dio. of Exeter, rated at £10 17s. 6d. Patron, the duke of Bedford. The church—ded. to St Eustache—is a spacious building, and contains several fine monuments. Here are places of worship for Independents, Unitarians, Wesleyans, and Quakers.—“An abbey of Black monks, begun here by Ordgar, earl of Devonshire, A. D. 961, and finished by his son Ordulf, to the honour of the Virgin Mary and St Rumon. It was endowed at the suppression with £902 6s. 7d. q. per ann. Speed; £902 6s. 7d. Dugd.; £902 5s. 7d. dim. q. Stevens, l. 34; and the site granted, 31st Hen. VIII., to John Lord Russel. Here were also an hospital for lepers, dedicated to St Mary Magdalene; and a house for friars Augustines.”—Tanner’s Not. Mon. The grammar school was endowed in 1649 by Sir J. Glanville, for the maintenance and education of one boy; the estates are now vested in the duke of Bedford, who allows the master a house and £20 per annum, for instructing 8 boys. A subscription school for 140 boys and 120 girls is conducted on Dr Bell's system, and is chiefly supported by the duke of Bedford. Several almshouses and public charities adorn this parish. TEWKESBURY, a hundred at the northern extremity of the co. of Gloucester, containing 16 parishes, including the borough of Tewkesbury.

TEWKESBURY, a prescriptive borough, market-town, and parish, in the lower division of the hundred of Tewkesbury, co. of Gloucester, 8 m. N.N.E. from Gloucester. It was first incorporated by Queen Elizabeth, and is governed by two bailiffs, a high steward, recorder, 24 common-councillors and 24 assistants, town-clerk, coroner, and other officers. The bailiffs and 4 common-councillors are justices of the peace within the borough, and hold quarterly courts of session for all offences not capital; the bailiffs and recorder hold weekly courts of record for recovering debts under £50; and the corporation holds a court-leet, the jurisdiction of which extends over the hundred. This borough returns two members to parliament; the electors, with the freemen and freeholders, are in number about 600. The bailiffs are the returning officers.

The situation of the town of Tewkesbury is particularly agreeable, being in a delightful valley nearly surrounded by water. It consists of three principal streets, with smaller ones branching off in different directions, all well-paved, and the houses in general have a handsome appearance.—The town-hall, house of correction, gaol, and penitentiary, are substantial buildings. The market-house was erected by a company, to whom the corporation have mortgaged the tolls for 99 years. Wednesday and Saturday are the market-days. Fairs are held on the 2d Monday in March, 1st Wednesday in April, O. S., May 14th, June 22d, Sept. 4th, Oct. 10th, Wednesday before and after old Michaelmas-day, and the 1st Wednesday in Dec., O. S.—The chief branches of trade carried on here are in malt and leather. There is an extensive distillery, and a manufactory of nails. The stocking frame-work knitting affords employment to many hundreds of the inhabitants. In connexion with the rivers Avon and Severn there is a considerable carrying trade for goods to all parts of the kingdom; and on the banks of the Avon are some corn-mills.

Living, &c.—The living of Tewkesbury is a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester, not in charge, endowed with £1000. Patron, the lord-chancellor. The church—ded. to St Mary—is one of the largest and most magnificent Gothic edifices in England. It contains many beautiful monuments, several of which are to the memory of persons who fell in the battle of Tewkesbury. Here are places of worship for Independents, Baptists, Quakers, and Wesleyans.—According to Tanner, "A monastery was built here and endowed by two brothers, Oddo and Doddo, dukes of Mercia, A. D. 715, to the honour of the Blessed Virgin Mary, which having undergone many calamities during the civil and Danish wars, about the year 980, became a priory subject to Cranburn in Dorsetshire. But Robert Fitz Haimen, a noble Norman, who came in with William the Conqueror, enlarged the buildings and increased the possessions of Tewkesbury so much, that the monks of Cranburn chose, about A. D. 1102, to remove hither and make this the head house, after which it became a great abbey of Benedictine monks, who, at the suppression, were possessed of revenues, yearly, worth £1,596 1s. 3d. Dugd., Speed; or, according to Burnet, £1,596 15s. 6d. The site was granted, 36th Hen. VIII., to Tho. Strowde, Walter Erie, and James Paget."

The free grammar school, founded and endowed in 1576, is superintended by several of the corporation, by whom the master is appointed; there are also national, Lancasterian, and Blue-coat schools. Among other charities we may name almshouses for 10 widows, a dispensary, and a society for distributing blankets amongst the poor. Pop., in 1801, 4199; in 1831, 5780. A. P., £17,250.

History.—This place, which is of great antiquity, is supposed to have derived its original name from Theot, a Saxon recluse, who founded a hermitage here about the close of the 17th century, from whom it was called Theot-is-byrg. The last decisive battle between the houses of York and Lancaster was fought here in 1471, when the unfortunate duke of Somerset and several of his party took refuge in the church, from which they were inhumanly dragged to execution. During the wars between Charles I. and his parliament, this town was alternately in the hands of the royalists and the parliamentarians, until, in 1644, it was surprised by the latter, and remained in their possession till the conclusion of the war.

Patron, the vicar of Towsersey. The prebend of Thame—an impropriation—is rated at £82 12s. 3d. The church—ded. to St Mary—is a venerable cruciform building, with a handsome embattled tower rising from the centre. Here is a place of worship for Independents. "There was at Otteley, in the parish of Odington, in this county, an abbey of Cistercian monks founded by Sir Robert Galt, who were shortly after removed on account of the low and unhealthy situation to Tame; where Alexander, bishop of Lincoln, gave them his park to build a monastery on, A.D. 1137, or 1138. It was commended—as most of the religious houses of this order were—to the patronage of the Blessed Virgin Mary, and endowed, 26th Hen. VIII., with £256 13s. 7d. ob. per ann., as both Dugdale and Speed. The site was granted to the bishop of Oxford and his successors, 34th Hen. VIII., and afterwards, 1st Edw. VI., or Edw. IV., Richard Quatermain founded an hospital in this town near the church, and endowed it with lands."—Tanner's Not. Mon. There are two free schools, several annuities for apprenticing children, a fund of £100 per annum for relief of the poor, and an almshouse for five men and one woman.—This town, which is of Roman origin, was of considerable importance at the beginning of the 10th century, when a charter was obtained for it from Wulfhere, king of Mercia. During the Danish invasion, and the subsequent civil wars, it was the centre of military operations, and experienced many of the miseries of that distressful period. Pop., in 1801, 2293; in 1831, 2685. A. P., £9,520.

THAMES (THE), the most celebrated river in England, navigable a distance of 230 miles; it rises in Gloucestershire, and flowing N.E. to Oxfordshire, joins the Charwell, and proceeding S.E. forms a boundary to the counties of Berks, Bucks, Surrey, Middlesex, Essex, and Kent, and reaches London. The tide flows as high as Richmond in Surrey, a circuitous course of 70 miles.

THANET (ISLE OF), this isle, which forms the N.E. angle of the co. of Kent, is separated from the mainland by the river Stour and the water called the Nethergong. Its length, 9 m. from E. to W.; its breadth, 5 m. from N. to S. A strip of land, named St Mildred's Lynch, divides the island into two manors—Minster and Monkton. It formerly contained 11 parishes, but those of Sarr and All Saints have been united to St Nicholas, and Woodchurch to Birchington. The parishes of Minster, Monkton, and Stonar, with parts of St Nicholas and St Laurence, are under the jurisdiction of two constables, all the rest are within the jurisdiction of the parts of Dover and Sandwich. The soil of this district is particularly fertile, and in a high state of cultivation. The whole isle comprises nearly 23,000 acres of arable land, and 3500 acres of good pasture and marsh land. The popular watering places, Margate, Ramsgate, and Broadstairs, are on this island.

The living of St Cuthbert is a discharged rectory with that of Holy Trinity, endowed with £1,600. St Peter's is a discharged rectory with that of St

Nicholas, rated at £5 ls. 5½d.—St Mary the Less is a curacy, rated at £1 18s. 6½d. Here are places of worship for Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, Quakers, and Roman Catholics. Tanner says that, "In this famous town was a society of religious persons to the church of St Mary, as early as the reign of King Edward the Confessor, if not before. Hither Arfastos, or Herfastus, bishop of the East Angles, removed his episcopal seat from North Elmham, A. D. 1075. But it continued here only 19 or 20 years, and then was translated to Norwich. After which, that great nobleman, Roger Bigot, or Bigot, by the advice of Bishop Herbert and others, built a monastery here about A. D. 1104, and shortly after brought Cistercian monks from Lewes in Sussex, and placed them in it, making it subordinate to the abbey of Cluny in France. But this house and place being found inconvenient, the same generous nobleman began on the other side of the water, a little without the town, a most stately monastery and church to the honour also of the blessed Virgin Mary. But dying shortly after, Prior Stephen carried on the work, and met with so much encouragement, that he finished it in about seven years, and removed his convent into it on the feast of St Martin, A. D. 1114. This priory was made denison, 5th Edward III., and 26th Henry VIII., was found to be endowed with £312 14s. 4d. ob. q. per annum, as Dugd.; and £418 16s. 3d. as Speed; and was granted in exchange, 32d Henry VIII., to its patron, Thomas, duke of Norfolk, who was once intended to refound herein a college of secular priests. Here were also a priory of canons regular of the order of Holy Sepulchre; a Benedictine nunnery dedicated to St George; a college or gild dedicated to St Mary; five hospitals, a house of Austin, and another of Black friars." A free grammar school, and an hospital for two men and two women, were founded in the reign of James I. by Sir R. Fulmerston. There is also a national school supported by subscription. A certain number of children are annually apprenticed by means of a liberal fund bequeathed for that purpose by Sir J. Williamson. The sum of £1000 was bequeathed by Mr P. Sterne for relief of the poor, and there are several smaller benefactions. This ancient town is supposed by most antiquarians to be the site of the Sitomagus of the Romans in 435. At one time it was the metropolis of East Anglia, and owing to its proximity to the North sea, was subjected to frequent incursions by the Danes, by whom it was reduced to ashes in the 9th century. In the reign of Edward the Confessor, the town had recovered from its calamities, and nearly regained its former importance, and in the reign of Edward III., comprised 24 streets, 5 market-places, 20 churches, 8 monasteries, and 6 hospitals. Pop., in 1801, 2246; in 1831, 3462. A. P., £5,946.

According to Tanner, "Bede, in his Ecclesiastical history, Book III. c. 22, tells us, that Cedda, bishop of the East Saxons, about A. D. 630, converted the inhabitants of this county to the faith of Christ, built churches in several places, and ordained priests and deacons to assist him in that great work; but especially in the city, which, in the language of the Saxons, is called Ythancester, and also in that which is named Tillaburgh—the first of which places is on the bank of the river Pante, the other on the bank of the Thames,—where, gathering a flock of the servants of Christ, he taught them to observe the discipline of a regular life, as far as those rude people were then capable. From hence, Cressy saith, he built monasteries here; and Camden, Norden, and Newcourt say, he had his episcopal see at West Tilbury. Wharton, in his account of Cedda, amongst the bishops of London, takes no notice of this; and as to Ythancester, it hath been so long swallowed up in the river Pante, or, as it is now called, Frodsham, that there have not been any remains of it for many years; but it is supposed to have been where St Peter's-on-the-Wall now is, or near it."—Tilbury-Fort stands on the banks of the Thames, opposite to Gravesend, surrounded by a double moat, and containing good accommodation for the garrison. Some traces of Queen Elizabeth's camp are to be seen in the neighbourhood. Pop., in 1801, 201; in 1831, 276. A. P., £2,785.

TINDALE, the largest ward, and that which forms the S.W. portion of the co. of Northumberland. It contains 33 parishes, including 6 market-towns, 4 chapelries, and 156 townships. None of the Northumberland wards equal Tindale in extent and population. It is computed to be, on an average, 29 miles in length from east to west, and 28 miles in breadth from north to south. It contains every variety of soil and aspect; the central and eastern parts consist of rich and highly cultivated lands; but the rest of the ward is mostly mountainous wilds covered with heath. It is well watered by numerous rivers and burns, and is uncommonly rich in mineral productions. About 41,000 acres are annually appropriated to the growth of grain and roots, and about 27,000 acres are kept as meadow lands. As the wall of Severus, that stupendous remnant of the power, the art, and the policy of the Romans, passed through this ward, it abounds with the most curious and interesting antiquities.

TINGEWICK, a parish in the second division of the three hundreds of Buckingham, co. of Buckingham. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Buckingham and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £12 16s. 3d. Patron, New college, TINSLEY, a chapelry in Rotherham parish, W. R. of Yorkshire, $2\frac{1}{2}$ m. S.W. by W. from Rotherham. Living, a perpetual curacy annexed to Rotherham vicarage, in the archd. and dio. of York, certified at £29 18s., and returned at £111. Patron, in 1829, Earl Fitzwilliam. Pop., in 1801, 268; in 1831, 368.

TINTAGELL, a parish in Leaneath hundred, co. of Cornwall, 1 m. W. from Bossiney. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Cornwall and dio. of Exeter, rated at £8 11s. 3d. Patrons, the dean and canons of Windsor. The church, ded. to St Simphorian, contains a very ancient font. Here is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. This place is celebrated as containing one of the most magnificent ruins in the venerable remains of King Arthur's castle, situated partly on a stupendous crag almost surrounded by sea, and partly on a lofty cliff of the mainland. David, prince of Wales, was entertained in this fortress during his rebellion against Henry III. Pop. of this parish, in 1801, including the hamlets of Bossiney and Trevena, was 649; in 1831, 1006. A. P., £3,674.

TINTERNE-ABBEY, in Chapel-hill parish, co. of Monmouth, $4\frac{1}{2}$ m. N. from Chapstow. "This," says Grose, "was a Cistercian abbey, founded A. D. 1131, by Walter de Clare, and dedicated to St Mary. This Walter was grandson of William the son of Osbert, to whom William the Conqueror had given the manors of Wollaston and Tudenham, and all he could conquer from the Welch. Walter dying without issue was succeeded by his brother Robert Strongbowe, earl of Pembroke, whose grandson Robert Strongbowe was the conqueror of Leinster in Ireland. The male line of these Strongbowes failing, Maud, the eldest of their female heirs, was married to Hugh Bigod, earl of Norfolk and Suffolk. William, lord-marshal of England, and earl of Pembroke, in the seventh year of the reign of King Henry III., confirmed to the monks here all the lands, possessions, liberties, and immunities formerly granted by his predecessors; the particulars of which are to be seen in the Monasticon. Robert Bigod, earl of Norfolk, anno 1301, also confirmed to them divers lands at Portcassek, Pentirk, Modisgat, &c. His charter is likewise printed in the Monasticon. About the time of the dissolution, here were 13 religious, when the estates were, according to Dugdale, estimated at £192 l. 4d. ob. per annum. Speed says the value was £256 l. 6d. The site was granted the 28th of Henry VIII., to Henry, earl of Worcester, and is now the property of his grace the duke of Beauford. In 1553, here remained in charge £3 6s. 8d. in annuities and corrodiæ.

"The inside of this monastery affords a fine specimen of that style of architecture called Gothic; its rich west window, still quite entire, is much admired, though perhaps somewhat defective in point of proportion, being rather too broad for its height. The small door beneath it is extremely poor: the intent of the architect is manifest; he meant by its contrast with the loftiness of the roof to strike the beholders. The fragments of its once sculptured roof, and other remains of its fallen decorations, are piled up with more regularity than taste, on each side the grand aisle: they are worthy observation; several of them both for invention and execution would do honour to the best artist of the present age. There are also some mutilated figures formerly belonging to monuments, particularly the head of a monk; and the figure of a knight armed in a coat of mail, his shield on his left arm is said to represent one of the Strongbowes, earl of Pembroke. It is broken off just above the knees; the legs are wanting. The right hand, which is shown, has five fingers and a thumb. Whether this was a natural peculiarity of the person represented, or the mistake of the artist, is uncertain. On the whole, though this monastery is undoubtedly light and elegant, it wants that gloomy solemnity so essential to religious ruins; those yawning vaults and dreary recesses which strike the beholder with a religious awe, and make him almost shudder at entering them, calling into his mind all the tales of the nursery."

TINTERNE-PARVA, a parish in the upper division of Ragland hundred, co. of Monmouth, 5½ m. N. from Chepstow. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Llandaff, rated at £2 l. 5½d., and returned at £106 l. 8s. 5d. Patron, — Gale, Esq. Church ded. to St Michael. Pop., in 1801, 248; in 1831, 313. A. P., £584.

TINTINHULL, a hundred situated towards the S. side of the co. of Somerset, containing seven parishes, including the borough of Ilchester. The pop. of this hundred, in 1831, was 4402.

TINTINHULL, a parish in the above hundred and co., 2½ m. S.W. from Ilchester. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Wells and dio. of Bath and Wells, rated at £9 8s. 9d., and returned at £60. Patron, in 1829, the Right Hon. W. Arbuthnot. Church ded. to St Margaret. Pop., in 1801, 333; in 1831, 473. A. P., £3,507.

TINTWISTLE, or TINGETWISSEL, a township in Mottram parish, co.-palatine of Chester, 9 m. N.E. by E. from Stockport. Here is a place of worship for Calvinistic Methodists, with a school attached to it. This place was formerly a borough. Pop., in 1801, 1021; in 1831, 1820.

TINWELL, a parish in East hundred, co. of Rutland, 10 m. E.N.E. from Uppingham. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough, rated at £12 l. 10s. 5d. Patron, in 1829, the marquis of Exeter. Church ded. to All Saints. Here is a small endowment for teaching poor children. Pop., in 1801, 230; in 1831, 262. A. P., £2,115.

TIPNOAK, a hundred in Bramber rape, co. of Essex, containing three parishes.

TIPTON, or TIBBINGTON, a parish in the S. division of Offlow hundred, co. of Stafford, near the source of the Trent, 2½ m. W. S.W. from Wednesbury. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Salep and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, certified at £16. Patron, the prebendary of Pipa-Minor, in Lichfield cathedral. Church ded. to St Martin. Here is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. The charity schools are numerous, affording instruction to more than 1000 children. This is a place of great importance owing to its situation in a rich mining district abounding in the finest coal and ironstone: the latter is wrought to such an extent, that there are no less than nine forges for the manufacture of pig-iron, which is made at the rate of 70 tons per week. Steam-engines and all articles of ironmongery are manufactured to a very considerable extent, and the trade is greatly facilitated by the Birmingham canal. Pop., in 1801, 4288; in 1831, 14,951. A. P., £22,804.

TIPTREE, in Great Braxted parish, co. of Essex, 4 m. E. from Witham. "A priory of Black canons ded. to St Nicholas, to which Ralph de Munchensi and Albrede his wife were great benefactors, temp. Edward I. It was one of those small monasteries which were dissolved by Cardinal Wolsey, 17th Henry VIII., at which time Anthony Darcy claimed to be founder, and it was valued only at £22 l. 6s. 4d. per annum, as in Speed, viz. the spiritualities £4, and the temporalities £18 l. 6s. 4d. It was, after the forfeiture of the cardinal, granted with Stanegate, 24th Henry VIII., in exchange to the hospitalers."—Tanner's Not. Mon.

TIRGWALD, a hamlet in Gwanws parish, co. of Cardigan, S. W., 12 m. S.E. from Aberystwith.

TIRLEY, or TURLEY, a parish partly in the lower division of Deerhurst hundred, and partly in that of Westminster hundred, co. of Gloucester, 4½ m. S.W. by W. from Tewkesbury. Living, a discharged vicarage and a peculiar of Deerhurst, rated at £9 6s. 8d. Patron, the lord-chancellor. Church ded. to St Michael. Here is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. A national school was established in 1817. This parish contains the hamlet of Haw, at which place there is a handsome stone-bridge across the Severn.

Pop., in 1801, 365; in 1831, 498. A. P., £3,940.

TIRLEY, a lordship in Drayton-in-Hales parish, co. of Stafford, $9\frac{1}{2}$ m. W. by N. from Eccleshall. Pop., in 1801, 581; in 1831, with the parish.

TIRREL, a hamlet in Barton parish, co. of Westmoreland, 13 m. W.N.W. from Appleby.

TIR-Y-MYNACH, a township in Llanbrynmair parish, co. of Montgomery, N. W., 10 m. E. from Machynllaeth.

TIR-Y-MYNACH, or the Monk's Land, a township in Gillsfield parish, co. of Montgomery, N. W., 3 m. N. from Welshpool.

TISBURY, a parish in Dunworth hundred, co. of Wilts, $3\frac{1}{4}$ m. S.E. from Hindon, containing the tythings of Chicksgrove with Staple. Living, a vicarage with the curacy of East Hatch, in the archd. and dio. of Salisbury, rated at £18 10s. 10d., and returned at £140. Patroness, in 1829, Mrs R. Prevost. The church, ded. to St John the Baptist, is an ancient and spacious edifice, and contains several monuments of the Wardours and Arundels. Here is a place of worship for Independents. In Tanner's Not. Mon. we find that, "Wintra, abbot of Tisebury in the kingdom of the West Saxons, is mentioned as flourishing about the year 720, in the life of St Boniface. King Ethelred gave to the abbey of Shaftsbury 'xx. mansas illo in loco, qui nunc dicitur Tisebiri vocatus vocamine sitae.'" The interest of £400, the bequest of Alice Combes, is appropriated to teaching poor children. Wardour castle is a magnificent structure, occupied by the Arundel family. At a little distance from it are the ruins of the ancient castle, the origin of which is very obscure, and no important event is recorded in history concerning it until the reign of Charles I., when it held out against two heavy attacks; the first by the parliamentarians who besieged it during the absence of Lord Arundel, he being at that time in waiting on the king at Oxford, having left the castle in the custody of the Lady Blanch Arundel, who, with a garrison of only 25 men, bravely defended it during five days, after which, she surrendered upon honourable terms, to which, however, the successful party were not punctual. The fortress was subsequently besieged by the royalists under Lord Arundel, and after an obstinate resistance, was delivered up to him. It sustained so much injury on these occasions, that it was no longer habitable, and soon fell into ruins; contiguous to which are some vestiges of the house occupied by the Arundels previous to the building of their present mansion. Sir Nicholas Hyde, chief justice of the king's bench in the reign of James I., was born in the ancient castle. Pop. of the parish, in 1801, 1961; in 1831, 2259. A. P., £13,409.

TISSINGTON, a parish in Wirksworth wapentake, co. of Derby, $4\frac{1}{2}$ m. N. from Ashborne. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Derby and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, returned at £40. Patron, in 1829, Sir H. Fitzherbert. Church ded. to St Mary. Here are two bequests, amounting together to £9 per annum, for teaching poor children. In the village are several springs, and the villagers have a custom of assembling on Holy Thursday, and decorating these fountains with flowers, then they attend divine service at the church, after which the minister and congregation repair to the springs, where part of the service is read, and the remainder of the day is spent in rural festivity. Pop., in 1801, 455; in 1831, 459. A. P., £5,450.

TISTED (EAST), a parish in Selbourne-Alton hundred, N. division, co. of Southampton, 5 m. S. by W. from Alton, containing the tything of Rotherfield. TITCHWELL, a parish in Smithdon hundred, co. of Norfolk, 5 m. W. by N. from Burnham-Westgate. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich, rated at £12. Patron, Eton college. Church ded. to St Mary. Here is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Four boys of this parish are privileged to enter Brancaster free-school. Pop., in 1801, 107; in 1831, 159. A. P., £1,641.

TITLEY, a parish in Wigmore hundred, co. of Hereford. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Hereford, certified at £19. Patron, Winchester college. Church ded. to St Peter. Formerly this was the seat of a Benedictine priory, founded as a cell to the abbey of Tyronne in France. Here is a national school. Courts leet and baron are occasionally held here. Pop., in 1801, 290; in 1831, 328. A. P., £2,556.

TITLINGTON, a township in Eglingham parish, co. of Northumberland, $6\frac{1}{2}$ m. W. by N. from Alnwick. Pop., in 1801, 63; in 1831, 78.

TITSEY, a parish in the upper division of Tandridge hundred, co. of Surrey, 5 m. N. E. by E. from Godstone. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Surrey and dio. of Winchester, rated at £7 17s. 3d. Patron, in 1829, W. L. Gower, Esq. Pop., in 1801, 108; in 1831, 202. A. P., £1,552.

TITTENHANGER, a hamlet in St Peter's parish, co. of Hertford, $2\frac{1}{2}$ m. S.E. by E. from St Albans. The seat of the earl of Hardwicke was originally a palace occupied by the abbots of St Albans. Pop. of this hamlet, in 1801, 348; in 1831, 1038.

TITTENLEY, a township in Audlem parish, co.-palatine of Chester, 7 m. N. by E. from Nantwich. Pop., in 1801, 43; in 1831, 30.

TITTENSOR, a liberty in Stone parish, co. of Stafford, 4 m. N.W. by N. from Stone.

TITTESWORTH, a township in Leeke parish, co. of Stafford, 2 m. N.E. by N. from Leeke. Pop., in 1801, 274; in 1831, 447.

TITTLESHALL, or TITLISHALE, a parish in Launditch hundred, co. of Norfolk, 6½ m. S.S.W. from Fakenham. Living, a discharged rectory with that of Godwick, in the archd. and dio. of Norwich, rated at £9 12s. 8½d. Patron, in 1829, T. W. Coke, Esq. The church, ded. to St Mary, contains many ancient monuments, among which is an altar-tomb and effigy of the celebrated Sir E. Coke. Pop., in 1801, 439; in 1831, 570. A. P., £3,586.

TIVERTON, a hundred situated at the N.E. side of the co. of Devon, containing 5 parishes.

TIVERTON, a borough, market-town, and parish, forming the centre of the above hundred, 1½ m. N. by E. from Exeter, but under separate jurisdiction. It received its first charter from James I., and a second was granted by George I., according to which, the corporation consists of a mayor, 12 burgesses, and as many assistants, a recorder, and town-clerk. The mayor and two latter officers are annually elected by the corporation; the mayor, recorder, and late mayor, are justices of the peace, hold a quarterly court of session, and a court of record for all pleas within £100. This borough sends two members to parliament; the number of electors under the reform act being about 660, and the mayor is the returning officer. A great many of the inhabitants are employed in the manufacture of lace. The market is on Tuesday and Saturday. Fairs, 2d Tuesday after Whit-Sunday, and September 29th. The parish of Tiverton is divided into four portions, viz., Clare, Pitt, Priors, and Tidcombe. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Exeter; Clare portion rated at £27. Patron, in 1829, the Rev. R. Spurway.—Pitt portion at £36. Patrons, in 1829, Sir J. Vyvian, Bart., and the representatives of the Rev. J. Nerot alternately.—Tidcombe portion at £27. Patron, in 1829, the Rev. W. Rayer.—Priors portion at £10. Patron, King's college, Cambridge. The church, ded. to St Peter, is a venerable Gothic edifice, and contains a fine altar-piece, representing Peter's deliverance. There is also a chapel-of-ease ded. to St George, and each of the portionists performs the service in turn. Here are places of worship for Independents, Baptists, and Wesleyans. The free grammar school was founded and liberally endowed by Peter Blundell, a clothier in this town, who devised all his landed property in the county to 27 trustees, directing £3000 of the proceeds to be applied in the establishment and maintenance of six students at either of the universities, and one to Balliol college, Oxford, and other scholarships have been added through the munificence of several benevolent persons. A free English school was founded in 1611 by R. Comyn, alias Chilcott, in which 100 boys are instructed, who pay a trifling quarter-age. There is likewise a charity school for 100 children of both sexes. Almshouses for nine men, with a chapel annexed, were founded in 1529 by J. Greenway, and in 1579 a similar establishment for eight men was founded by J. Waldron, and another for six women by G. Slee, in 1613. Sixty-seven poor persons receive life annuities from a fund established by Mary Rice in 1697. Tiverton is a place of considerable antiquity, and was known as the village of Twyford so early as 872, and two centuries ago was considered the most important manufacturing town in the west of England; but at three different periods it suffered so materially from fire, that the property of the inhabitants was nearly destroyed; it now consists of several well-paved streets. The chief public buildings are the corn-market, town-hall, market-house, bridewell, theatre, and assembly rooms. A castle was erected here in 1106 by Rivers, earl of Devon, which continued for ages the head of the barony. In the turbulent times of Charles I., this fortress was garrisoned for the king, but soon captured by General Fairfax. Part of the boundary wall and the principal entrance are still visible. Pop., in 1801, 6505; in 1831, 9766. A. P., £14,011.

TIVERTON, a township in Bunbury parish, co.-palatine of Chester, 2 m. S. from Tarporley. Here is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. An old established corn-market is held every Monday at a place called Four-Lane-Ends in this township. Pop., in 1801, 347; in 1831, 618.

TIVETESHALL-ST-MARGARET, a parish in Diss hundred, co. of Norfolk, 5½ m. N.E. by N. from Diss. Living, a rectory with that of Tiveteshall-St-Mary, in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich, not in charge. Patron, in 1829, the earl of Orford. Pop., in 1801, 295; in 1831, 376. A. P., £2,788.

TIVETESHALL-ST-MARY, a parish in Diss hundred, co. of Norfolk, 5½ m. N.E. from Diss. Living, a rectory with that of Tiveteshall-St-Margaret, in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich, rated at £20. Patron, the earl of Orford. Pop., in 1801, 294; in 1831, 313. A. P., £1,872.

TIXALL, a parish in the S. division of Pirehill hundred, co. of Stafford, 3½ m. E. by S. from Stafford. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Stafford and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, rated at £8 0s. 8d. Patron, Sir C. Constable, Bart. Church ded. to St John the Baptist. Here is a place of worship for Roman Catholics. A very valuable freestone is quarried in this neighbourhood, which is much used in building of bridges, and peculiarly adapted for resisting the action of water. Pop., in 1801, 198; in 1831, 176. A. P., £3,070.

TOTNESS, a borough, market-town, and parish, with separate jurisdiction, but locally situated in Coleridge hundred, co. of Devon, $22\frac{1}{2}$ m. S.S.W. from Exeter. The charter—which was first granted by King John and confirmed by his successors—vests the government of this town in a mayor, recorder, 13 burgomasters, and 20 common-councilmen. The magistrates of the corporation hold quarter-sessions for all but capital offences arising within the borough. This corporate body is exempt from quayage and wharfage throughout the kingdom, except the port of London; and from serving in juries, except in the borough, for the inhabitants of the town and parish. Two members are returned to parliament for Totness. The number of electors is about 400, and the mayor is the returning officer.—The town is remarkably neat and clean, consisting principally of one long street, rising gradually from the foot of a bridge—which crosses the river Dart—till it reaches the site of the ancient castle, from which elevation the surrounding country is seen to great advantage, the windings of the river Dart adding much to the interest of the scenery. The river is navigable to the bridge, and during spring tides vessels of 100 tons burden can come to the quay, which convenience greatly facilitates the commercial intercourse of the town with London and Plymouth. Large quantities of cider are exported, and the chief imports are coal, grain, and culm. The town is well supplied with fish of every kind, and above the bridge is a salmon weir. The market is on Saturday. Fairs, 1st Tuesday in every month for cattle, Easter-Tuesday, May 12th, July 25th, and Oct. 28th. —Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Totness and dio. of Exeter, rated at £12 8s. 9d., returned at £29 9s. 8d. Patron, the lord-chancellor. The church—ded. to St Mary—is an erection of the 15th century, and contains a magnificent stone screen, a fine altar-piece, and stone pulpit, it has also a very valuable library. Here are places of worship for Independents, Wesleyans, and Unitarians. —“An alien priory, cell to the abbey of St Sergius and St Bachus at Angiers, to which the church of St Mary here, and several other lands, were given, by Johel fil. Aluredi, temp. Will. Conq. The monks here were of the Cluniac, or Benedictine order, and were not dissolved, temp. Hen. V., but continued till the general suppression, when the yearly value of this priory—which consisted of about six religious—was rated at £24 9s. 2d. ob. Dugd.; £124 10s. 2d. ob. Speed. The site of it was granted, 33rd Hen. VIII., to Katherine Champenon and others. Here were also an hospital and a Lazar-house.”—Tanner’s Not. Mon. The grammar school, founded in 1554, is endowed with landed property producing £70 per annum. There is a charity school in which betwixt 60 and 70 children are educated, 30 of whom are also clothed; and, besides a national school, the donations towards ameliorating the condition of the poor are numerous. TOTTENHAM, a parish in Edmonton hundred, co. of Middlesex, 6½ m. N. by E. from St Paul’s, London. It comprises High-Cross, Lower, Middle, and Wood Green wards; and consists of one long street, lighted with gas, and supplied with water by means of boring.—Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Middlesex and dio. of London, rated at £14. Patrons, the dean and chapter of St Paul’s. The church—ded. to All Saints—is an ancient edifice, situated on an eminence, and contains several curious monuments, a fine window of stained glass, and a font of very ancient workmanship. A new church has recently been erected by act of parliament. Here are places of worship for Independents, Baptists, Wesleyans, Quakers, and Roman Catholics. The grammar school, founded by N. Reynardson in 1685, was subsequently endowed by the duchess of Somerset with £250 for enlarging the building, and £1,100 for extending the benefits of the institution to all children in the parish, whose parents were not possessed of real property amounting to £20 per annum. The Blue-coat school, established in 1736, and the Green-coat school in 1792, are supported by voluntary contributions. Lancasterian schools for children of both sexes are supported in the same way. An almshouse for 12 persons, with a chapel annexed, was founded and endowed by N. Reynardson in 1685; a similar establishment for four women and four men was founded by Balthasar Sanchez, a Spaniard, who came to England with Philip of Spain, as his confectiener, and was the first who exercised that trade in London. Here are very extensive flour and oil mills, potteries for coarse brown ware, and a brewery.—Near Tottenham-Green is a cross, commemorating that spot as one of the resting-places of the corpse of Queen Eleanor. At a short distance from the high road is a stately edifice called Bruce castle, built in the 17th century on the site of an ancient edifice erected by Henry VIII., and honoured by that monarch’s presence when he came to meet his sister Margaret. It was also visited by Queen Elizabeth. The original castle was possessed and occupied by Robert de Bruce, father of Robert, king of Scotland. Pop. of Tottenham, in 1801, 3629; in 1831, 6937. A. The church, ded. to St Lawrence, was built in the 11th century, and contains a monument to Archbishop Sponne, who held the living in the reign of Henry VI. Pope Boniface also was once an incumbent of this parish. Here are places of worship for Independents, Baptists, and Wesleyans. According to Tanner, "A college or chantry founded here, temp. Henry VI., by William Sponne, D. D., and rector of Towcester, was valued at the dissolution at £19 6s. 8d. per annum, as Dugd. and Speed. This college and a messuage belonging to it were granted, 4th Edward VI., to Richard Hyebourn and William Dalby, who sold them to the feoffees of Archdeacon Sponne's will, by whom they have been converted into a grammar school and schoolmaster's house." The grammar school was founded in 1552 by the trustees of Sponne's charity. The Sunday school has a small endowment by Sir John Knightly. Among the provisions for the poor are three almshouses, founded in 1695 by Thomas Bickerstaff. Many relics of Roman antiquity have been discovered here, especially an artificial mount, which circumstance leads to the supposition that the place was originally a Roman station. To the N.W. are the ruins of a Saxon fortress, which, for a considerable time, resisted the attacks of the Danes. The town was rebuilt and fortified by Edward in 921, and surrounded by a wall of stone; the remains of which are still to be traced. The TUNBRIDGE, a market-town and parish in the lowey of Tunbridge, lathe of Aylesford, co. of Kent, 13 m. W.S.W. from Maidstone, situated on the river Tun, one of the five branches of the Medway. It is one of the polling places in the election of the members for the western division of the county. The county magistrates meet here once a fortnight, and a court of requests is held monthly. The principal manufactures are those of gunpowder and turnery goods. Coal and timber are brought hither by water from Maidstone, and a cattle fair is held the first Tuesday in every month. The weekly market is on Friday, and an annual fair October 12th. The living is a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Rochester, rated at £20 3s. 4d. Patron, the Rev. Sir C. Hardinge, Bart. The church, ded. to St Peter and St Paul, is an elegant modern structure. Here are places of worship for Wesleyans and Calvinistic Methodists. The free-school was founded by Sir A. Judd, a native of this town, in the reign of Queen Elizabeth. It is under the control of the Skinners' company of London, and All Souls' college, Oxford. This noble institution is open gratuitously to boys resident in the town, or within ten miles of it, and to others, on payment of small stipends to the masters. It has several exhibitions to both universities. A national school has been established here for the benefit of 500 children. "A priory of Black canons, erected by Richard of Clare, earl of Hertford, about the latter end of the reign of King Hen. 1st. Its patroness was St Mary Magdalene, and its revenues were valued in spiritualities at £48 lls. 4d. per annum, and in temporalities at £120 lls. 11d.; in all, at £169 lls. 3d. per annum. It was one of those small monasteries which Cardinal Welsey procured to be dissolved, and who had a grant of the same, 17th Henry VIII.—Tanner's Not. Mon. The ruins of a magnificent castle—the scene of many events recorded in history—are still in existence. This fortress, which is supposed to have been built by a Norman baron in the 11th century, was besieged by William Rufus in his contest with his brother of Normandy. It was captured by King John in his war with the barons; and in the reign of Henry III., when it was besieged by his son, Prince Edward, the town was burnt by the garrison, to check the approach of the royal forces. This castle, which belonged to the Clares, earls of Gloucester, devolved to the crown in the reign of Edward II., and subsequently was the property of the Stafford family, till the attainder of Henry Stafford, duke of Buckingham, under Henry VIII., when it again became crown property. The pop. of Tunbridge, in 1801, was 4371; in 1851, 10,380. A. P., £19,531.

TUNBRIDGE-WELLS, a large and populous hamlet partly in the parish of Tunbridge, partly in that of Speldhurst, co. of Kent, and partly in the parish of Frant, co. of Sussex, 18 m. S.W. from Maidstone, and 35 m. S.E. by S. from London. It is seated at the bottom of three hills, viz. Mount Sion, Mount Ephraim, and Mount Pleasant. That part called the Wells is at the point of junction of the three parishes. It has long been a celebrated watering place, famous for its mineral spring, discovered in 1606, when Dudley, Lord North, was restored to health by using the water. In the latter part of Charles II.'s reign, the present divisions of the place appear to have been established; they may be regarded as characteristic of the sentiments which prevailed amongst the parties who projected them. Mount Sion was the adopted seat of the Presbyterians and Independents; Mount Ephraim of the Baptists. Mount Sion adjoins the wells on the N.E. It is an agreeable eminence declining towards the W., and is chiefly occupied by lodging-houses. Mount Ephraim, N.W. of the parade, consists chiefly of private residences and lodging-houses, intermixed with gardens and fields. A commodious and handsome edifice has been erected here, called the Bath-house, fitted up with hot and cold baths. The wells have been frequently visited by members of the royal family, and are annually resorted to by numbers of the nobility, and persons of rank and fashion. The living of Tunbridge-wells is a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Rochester. Patrons, the trustees. The church, ded. to King Charles the Martyr, was built in the reign of King Charles II. The interior is wainscotted with oak, and the ceiling richly ornamented. Another church has lately been erected, partly by subscription and partly by a grant from the incorporated society for building churches and chapels. It is an elegant Gothic structure. The presentation to it belongs to the rector of Speldhurst. Here are places of worship for Wesleyans, and Lady Huntingdon's connexion. National schools and other charitable institutions adorn the place. The principal trade is in the manufacture and sale of toys, and turnery-ware. Races take place annually, and are well attended. About $\frac{1}{4}$ m. from the wells are some lofty rocks, which form a striking and romantic picture. In some parts they are 75 feet high, the mean height being 40 feet. Pop. with the parishes.

TYNEMOUTH, a parish in the E. division of Castle ward, co. of Northumberland, 9½ m. E.N.E. from Newcastle-upon-Tyne. It comprises the chapelrys of North Shields, and Whitley; and the townships of Chirton, Cullercoats, Monkseaton, Murton, or Moortown, Preston, and Tynemouth. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Northumberland and dio. of Durham, rated at £24 19s. 4d., returned at £28 5s. Patrons, in 1829, the duke of Northumberland and Sir J. D. Astley, Bart., alternately. Church ded. to St Mary and St Oswin.—“Among the monasteries and churches founded by St Oswald, the first Christian king of Northumberland, this is reckoned to be one; though others ascribe its foundation to King Ecgfrid. It is evident that St Herebald, the companion of St John of Beverley, was monk and abbot here in the beginning of the eighth century, and before the end of it this monastery was plundered by the Danes, as it was again by them under Hungar and Hubba in the next century, and by the same pagans a third time in the reign of King Ethelstan. The old church was dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, and seems to have lain desolate till the finding of King Oswin's relics here a little before the conquest, when, to the honour of St Mary and that king, Tosti, earl of Northumberland, repaired and endowed this religious house. Upon the banishment of Tosti, this country was given by the Conqueror to Robert de Moubray, who thereupon became earl, and placed in the church here—which had been given by Walthor, earl of Northumberland, to the monks of Yarrow, and by Earl Albyr to Durham—Black monks from St Alban's in Hertfordshire, to which abbey this priory was subordinate; though, 26th Hen. VIII., it was found to have a separate yearly revenue of £397 10s. 5d. ob. Dugd.; £511 4s. 1d. ob. Speed. The site and most of the lands were granted, 5th Edw. VI., to John, duke of Northumberland.”—Tanner's Not. Mon. The ruins of this ancient priory are situated on a peninsula of stupendous rocks at the mouth of the Tyne, and have been appropriated as a magazine for military stores, and the tower is converted into barracks; the approach to these interesting remains is by means of a drawbridge and gateway, defended by a double wall and deep moat. During the civil wars this fortress was defended by the earl of Newcastle in 1642, but was besieged and captured by General Leven in 1645. It has a governor and deputy appointed to it. Clifford's fort was erected by government in 1672; it is at the mouth of the river, and commands the entrance to the harbour.—The town of Tynemouth consists principally of one long street; the houses are well-built, and during the summer it is a place of fashionable resort, having every accommodation as sea-bathing quarters. Coals are found here in great abundance; there is also a strata of magnesian limestone. By act of 3d Wm. IV. TYTHERTON-KELLAWAYS, a tything in Bremhill parish, co. of Wilts, 3 m. E.N.E. from Chippenham. The origin of this place is worthy of attention. When the doctrines of Whitfield and Wesley were first promulgated, a native of Reading, named Connicker, became one of their most zealous devotees, and expended the bulk of his property in the erection of meeting-houses for their connexion. He erected one at Tytherton, and attached to it a burying-ground, garden, &c. Here he took up his residence and propagated his opinions very successfully for many years, until the schism between Wesley and Whitfield, when he and most of his hearers joined the Moravians. Accordingly, a house was prepared for the young unmarried women of the establishment. This society continued progressing for thirty years, by which time it was enabled to build a new chapel, sister-house, and residence for a pastor; and there has since been added a large school-room for children of every persuasion, for the purpose of communicating to them useful and general knowledge.

UPTON-UPON-SEVERN, a market-town and parish in the lower division of the hundred of Pershore, co. of Worcester. The town is supposed by Dr Stukely to have been erected on the site of a Roman station called Upoesa, and some antiquities have been found here. The town stands on the right bank of the river Severn, and consists of several well paved streets, containing good houses. The river is navigable for vessels of 100 tons burden, and is crossed by a stone-bridge of six arches, erected in 1606; though partly broken down in the parliamentary war, and subsequently repaired. Here is a harbour for barges, also wharfs for loading and unloading. The export trade is chiefly in Herefordshire and other cider. There is a subscription library; and a handsome market-house, with assembly-rooms and chamber for the magistrates, has lately been founded. The county magistrates hold petty sessions here once a fortnight, and an occasional manorial court is held. Thursday is market-day. Fairs for horses, cattle, sheep, and leather, are held on first Thursday after Mid-Lent, Thursday in Whitsunweek, July 10th, and Thursday before October 2d. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Worcester, rated at £27, and in patronage of the bishop of Worcester. The church is an elegant building, ded. to St Peter and St Paul. URSWICK (GREAT, or MUCH), a parish in the hundred of Lonsdale, north of the Sands, co.-palatine of Lancaster. It contains the townships of Adgarley, Bardsea, Bolton, Stainon, and Little Urawick. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester, rated at £7 17s. 10d., and returned at £45 10s., and in patronage of the parishioners. Church ded. to St Michael. There was formerly a chapel at Bolton, the remains of which are still visible. Some Roman antiquities have been found here. Here is a grammar school, founded in 1580, in which forty boys are instructed on a rent-charge of £15, left by William Marshall. It is 3 m. S.W. by S. from Ulverstone. Pop., in 1801, 633; in 1831, 752. A. P., £3,130.

USHLAWRÇOED, a hamlet in the parish of Bedweltry, lower division of the hundred of Wentloog, co. of Monmouth. Pop., in 1831, 5,359.

USK, a hundred in the co. of Monmouth. It contains 21 parishes, with the market-towns of Caerleon and Usk. Pop., in 1831, 9,684.

USK, a market-town and parish in the upper division of the hundred of Usk, co. of Monmouth. It receives its name from the river Usk, on the banks of which it is situated, and stands on the site of the Roman station Burrium. On an abrupt eminence to the east of the town stand the remains of an ancient castle, consisting of the gateway, tower, and outer walls, inclosing a considerable area. It was destroyed in the parliamentary war, when the town also suffered considerably. The town consists of several streets; the houses in which are considerably scattered, and separated by gardens and orchards. Here is a bridge of five arches over the Usk. The town-hall is a neat structure, erected by the duke of Beaufort. Here is also a prison, which has lately been repaired, and a tread-mill added, at the expense of the county. The town is incorporated, and governed by a portreeve, (who has concurrent jurisdiction with the county magistrates,) a recorder, and burgesses. The recorder appoints the burgesses, from among whom the portreeve is chosen. On retiring from office, the portreeve becomes an alderman. Four constables are chosen at an annual court-leet. Here are held the quarter-sessions for the county, and the petty sessions for the division: the portreeve and recorder also held a court-leet every second week. This town returns a member to parliament, in conjunction with Newport and Monmouth. The franchise is enjoyed by about 70. Friday is market-day, and a cattle-market is held on the first Monday of each month. Fairs are held on April 20th for wool, June 20th, October 29th, and on the Monday before Christmas for horses, cattle, and pedlery. The inhabitants are employed in the salmon fishery, husbandry, and manufacture of earthenware. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Llandaff, rated at £10 10s., and, in 1829, in patronage of W. A. Williams, Esq. Church ded. to St Mary. It is in the Anglo-Norman style of architecture, and appears to have been originally of a cruciform shape. It contains many interesting monuments. It was formerly the church of a priory of Benedictine nuns, founded before A. D. 1236, the endowments of which amounted, according to Speed, to £69 9s. 8d., and whose possessions were given by Henry VIII. to Roger Williams. The Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, and Roman Catholics, have places of worship here. Here are almshouses for twenty-four poor persons, each of whom receives 2s. 6d. weekly. A free grammar school was founded here in 1624 by Mr Roger Edwards. The endowment yields £70 per annum, and the master has a free house. Here is also a national school. It is 144 m. W. by N. from London. Pop., in 1801, 734; in 1831, 1775. A. P., £3,248.

USMASTON, a parish in the hundred of Dungleddau, co. of Pembroke, South Wales. Living, a perpetual curacy in the dio. of St David's, rated at £5 10s., and returned at £35, and in patronage of the chapter of St David's. The parish lies on the West Clodau river. It is 1½ m. S.E. from Haverford West. Pop., in 1801, 362; in 1831, 525. A. P., £1,493.

USSELBY, a parish in the northern division of the wapentake of Walshcroft, parts of Lindsey, co. of Lincoln. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £8, and returned at £45, and, in 1829, in patronage of J. B. Elliott, Esq. Church ed. to St Margaret. The parish is within the liberty of the duchy of Lancaster. It is 2½ m. N.N.W. from Market-Raisen. Pop., in 1801, 56; in 1831, 84. A. P., £426.

USWORTH (GREAT and LITTLE), united townships in the parish of Washington, eastern division of the ward of Chester, co. of Durham. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here. Here is a well endowed school. It is 4 m. S.E. from Gateshead. The pop. with North Biddick, in 1801, was 1236; in 1831, 1477.

UTKINTON, a township in the parish of Tarporley, first division of the hundred of Eddisbury, co. palatine of Chester. It is 1½ m. N. by W. from Tarporley. Pop., in 1801, 458; in 1831, 564.

UTLEY, a hamlet in the parish of Keighley, W. R., co. of York.

UTON, a tything in the parish and hundred of Crediton, co. of Devon.

UTTERBY, a parish in the wapentake of Ludborough, parts of Lindsey, co. of Lincoln. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £5 6s. 8d., and returned at £130, and, in 1829, in patronage of the Rev. L. E. Towne. Church ded. to St Andrew. It is within the liberty of the duchy of Lancaster, and 4½ m. N. by W. from Louth. Pop., in 1801, 118; in 1831, 198. A. P., £1,374.

UTTLESFORD, a hundred in the co. of Essex. It contains 24 parishes, with the town of Saffron-Walden. Pop., in 1831, 12,496.

UTTOXETER, a market-town and parish in the southern division of the hundred of Totmonslow, co. of Stafford. It contains the townships of Crakemarsh, Creighton, Stramshall, and Woodlands, with the liberty of Loxley. This is a place of great antiquity, and the origin of the name is involved in obscurity; by some it has been supposed to be derived from the Saxon words, Uttoc, a mattock, and Hathor, a heath. It was once called Uicester, a name apparently of Roman origin, but it does not appear that the Romans had any settlement here. This town formerly belonged to the Peverills of the Peak, lords of Nottingham, and at one time formed part of the lands of the duchy of Lancaster. It was the seat of frequent military operations during the parliamentary war, chiefly in consequence of its vicinity to Tutbury castle. The town is situated on the western bank of the river Dove, on a rising ground, and consists of several streets containing very good houses, and having a market-place in the centre. Here is an ancient bridge of stone over the river Dove, uniting the counties of Stafford and Derby. In the vicinity are extensive and fertile meadow and pasture lands; and trout, grayling, and other varieties of fish abound in the river and tributary streams. A good red clay, used for making bricks, is found in the neighbourhood. In the vicinity are many iron forges; but the inhabitants derive their chief subsistence from traffic in corn and cheese, which has lately been facilitated by the formation of a branch of the Trent and Mersey canal, which comes up to a wharf in the town. The market—a grant of which was obtained in 1306 by Thomas, earl of Lancaster—is held on Wednesday. It is well attended, especially on every alternate week, when a large market for cattle and merchandise is held. Fairs for cattle, sheep, &c., are held on Tuesday before Old Candlemas, Thursday in Easter-week, May 6th, June 3d, July 4th and 31st, September 1st and 19th, and November 11th and 27th. The town was made a free borough in the reign of Henry III. by William de Ferrars, earl of Derby. It was subject, previous to 1636, to the jurisdiction of the court held for the honour of Tutbury. The county magistrates hold the petty sessions for the division here, every Wednesday. They also appoint constables, &c., when necessary. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Stafford and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, rated at £7 1s. 8d., and in patronage of the dean and canons of Windsor. Church ded. to St Mary. The building is modern, but an ancient tower and spire of great beauty remain. The Baptists, Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, and Society of Friends, have places of worship here. Here are almshouses with endowments, and a grammar school, in which 15 scholars are educated, on an endowment of £13 6s. 8d. It is 135 m. N.W. by N. from London. Pop., in 1801, 2779; in 1831, 4864. A. P., £24,257.

UWCH-ARTRO, a township in the parish of Llanabu, hundred of Ardudwy, co. of Merioneth, North Wales. It is 1½ m. N. by W. from Barmouth.

UWCH-COED, a township in the parish of Penegoes, hundred of Machynllaeth, co. of Montgomery. It is 1 m. E. from Machynllaeth. Pop., in 1831, 446.

UXBRIDGE, a market-town, and chap-elry, in the parish of Hillington, hundred of Elthorne, co. of Middlesex. It was anciently called Oxebrouge, and is supposed to have been founded in the reign of Alfred. It had a surrounding ditch, and was regarded as an important station, as being a frontier fortress. It was also the scene of negotiations between Charles I. and the parliament. The house in which the commissioners met is now the crown inn. The parliamentary army had its headquarters here in 1647. The town is situated on a gentle declivity on the banks of the river Colne, over which are two bridges. The high road from London to Oxford passes through it, as does also the grand junction canal, on which are wharfs, warehouses, and other conveniences for trade. The town consists chiefly of a single well paved street, nearly a mile in length, and having a commodious market-house in the centre. Here are a subscription library and reading-room, and attached to one of the inns is an assembly-room. There is a considerable trade in flour, for grinding which there are many mills on the river. It is supposed that the average quantity of flour ground is 3000 sacks per week. There is much general trade, and instruments of husbandry are manufactured to a considerable extent. The market, which was granted by Henry II., is held on Thursday. Corn is sold here to as great an extent as any where in the kingdom. A market for provisions is held on Saturday. Fairs are held on March 25th, July 31st, September 29th, and October 10th. There is much earth for bricks in the vicinity, which is sold at a high price, and wrought to a great extent. The town was formerly a borough, and was governed by bailiffs. It is now under the superintendence of two constables, four head-boroughs, and two ale-conners. The county magistrates hold petty sessions here on the first and third Mondays of every month; and a court of requests for debts under 40s. is held on the first Tuesday of each month. The living is a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Middlesex and dio. of London, not in charge. The incumbent must be a fellow of Pembroke college, Oxford, and the trustees of G. Townsend, Esq., are patrons. The chapel is ded. to St Margaret. It was erected about 1447, and is a curious structure in the later style of English architecture. It contains a curious stone font and many interesting monuments. It has lately received an addition of 300 free sittings. The Baptists, Society of Friends, and Independents, have places of worship here. Here is a well endowed free school; also a school of industry and a Unitarian school. There are several benefactions for the poor. The marquis of Anglesea takes the title of earl from this place. It is 15 m. W. by N. from London. Pop., in 1801, 2111; in 1831, 3043. A. P., £7,111.

VACHARIE, a hamlet, formerly a chapelry in the parish of Cranley, co. of Surrey.

VALE-ROYAL, in the parish of Whitegate, co.-palatine of Chester. "Prince Edward, eldest son of Henry III., began in his father's lifetime, viz., A. D. 1266, an abbey in his manor of Dernhale, for one hundred monks of the Cistercian order. But when he became king, 1277, he laid the foundation of a stately monastery, not far from thence, in a more pleasant situation, which he called Vale-Royal: hither the monks removed about 1281, but were forced to live in mean and strait lodgings for several years, till their great abbey and all its offices, which, in this cheap country, cost £32,000 in building, were finished, A. D. 1330. The conventual church here was dedicated to our Lord Jesus Christ, the Virgin Mary, St Nicholas, and St Nicholas; and it was endowed, 26th Henry VIII., with lands and revenues to the clear yearly value of £540 6s. 2d. The site of this abbey was granted, 35th Henry VIII., to Thomas Helcroft."—Tanner's Not. Mon.

VIRGINIA-WATER, the largest piece of artificial water in the kingdom, is situated in Windsor forest. The scenery in the neighbourhood is bold and rugged, being the commencement of Bagshot heath. The variety of surface here agreeably relieves the eye, after the monotony of the first twenty miles from town, which equally fatigues the traveller either upon the Bath or western road. About two miles beyond the town of Egham is a neat inn, the Wheatsheaf. From the garden of this inn there is a direct access to the lake. The grounds are several miles in extent; although so perfectly secluded that a traveller might pass on the high road without being aware that he was near any object that could gratify his curiosity. They are now covered with magnificent timber, originally planted with regard to the grandest effects of what is called landscape gardening. By the permission of the king, Virginia water is open to all persons.

VITTOVER, a hamlet in the parish of Corfe, co. of Dorset.

VOBSTER, a hamlet in the parish of Mells, co. of Somerset.

The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here. It is 6 m. S. from Doncaster. Pop., in 1801, 406; in 1831, 690. A. P., £3,507.

WAGHEN, or WAWN, a parish partly within the liberty of St Peter of York, and partly in the middle division of the wapentake of Holderness, E. R. of the co. of York. It comprises the townships of Meux and Waghen. Living, a discharged vicarage, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the chancellor of the cathedral church of York, valued at £7 0s. 10d., returned at £29. The church is in the decorated style of English architecture, and ded. to St Peter. It is 5 m. S.E. by E. from Beverley. Pop., in 1801, 299; in 1831, 388. A. P., £4,740.

WAINFLEET, a market-town in the Marsh division of the wapentake of Candleshoe, parts of Lindsey, co. of Lincoln. This place is supposed, during the time of the Romans, to have supplied the whole province with salt, and the Roman road between Bannocallium and Lindurn, still exists under the name of the Salters' road. This was formerly of considerable importance, and sent a Burgess to the grand council of the 11th of Edward III. It also supplied two ships of war to the armament prepared against Brittany in the year 1359.—The town is situated in a marshy district, on a small creek or haven, formerly capable of admitting vessels of some size, but which cannot at present permit the entrance of any but small craft. The diminution of the waters has arisen in consequence of the inclosure of the East Fen. It is supposed that the town was originally situated at the distance of a mile and a half higher up the creek, at a place called High Wainfleet, where the church of All Saints stood till 1820. Saturday is market-day; and fairs, chiefly for cattle, are held on the Saturday after May 21st, July 5th, August 24th, and October 24th.—The town contains the following parishes, which are all in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln:—All Saints, a rectory, rated at £16 3s. 6d., in the patronage of the lord-chancellor. The church was lately rebuilt at an expense of £3,000, and contains 400 free sittings.—The living of St Mary's, the church of which is in ruins, is rated at £8 13s. 4d., and in patronage of Bethlehem hospital, London.—The living of St Thomas is a perpetual curacy, united to the rectory of All Saints. The Society of Friends and the Wesleyan Methodists have places of worship here. In 1424, William of Waynfleet, bishop of Winchester, and lord-high-chancellor, in the reign of Henry VI., founded and endowed a free grammar school here, the master of which has 19 acres of land and a rent-free residence, as also a small annual salary from Magdalene college, Oxford. This town is within the liberty of the duchy of Lancaster. Distance from London, 128 m. N. by E., and from Lincoln, 39 $\frac{1}{2}$ m. E.S.E. Pop., in 1301, 927; in 1831, 1795. A. P., £9,407.

WAINGRIF, a place in the parish of Pentriche, co. of Derby. "This was given by Ralph Fitz Stephen to the Knights Hospitallers of St John of Jerusalem, for a house of that order to be here built."—Tanner's Not. Mon.

WAITBY, or WALDEBY, a township in the parish of Kirkby-Stephen, East ward, co. of Westmoreland. Here is a free school, in which about 40 children receive instruction on an endowment of £40 per annum, founded in 1680 by James Highmore, a citizen of London. Distance from Kirkby-Stephen, 2 m.

W. Pop., in 1801, 41; in 1831, 60. A. P., £5,207.

WATTHE, a parish in the wapentake of Bradley-Haverstowe, parts of Lindsey, co. of Lincoln. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £2 14s. 2d., returned at £60, and, in 1829, in patronage of Miss Borrell. Church ded. to St Martin. This parish is within the liberty of the duchy of Lancaster. Distance from Great Grimsby, 6½ m. S. by E. Pop., in 1801, 41; in 1831, 31. A. P., £8,205.

WAKEFIELD,

A parish in the lower division of the wapentake of Abergiff, W. R. of the co. of York. It contains the market-town of Wakefield, the chapelry of Horbury and Stanley, and the townships of Alverthorpe, Thornes, and Wrenthorpe. It is supposed that a Roman station existed in this neighbourhood, or at least that a town existed here in the time of the Romans, as coins and other relics of that people have at various times been found in the vicinity. It belonged to the royal demesne in the reign of Edward the Confessor, and continued so till the reign of Henry I., who granted it, about 1107, to William, earl of Warren. It continued in his family till the reign of Edward III., when it lapsed to the crown by default of heirs. It was subsequently granted by Charles I. to Henry, earl of Holland, and now belongs to the duke of Leeds, an ancestor of whom purchased it in 1700. It is one of the largest manors or lordships in the kingdom, extending more than 30 miles from east to west. Mention is made of this town in Domesday-book under the name of Waehesfeld. Here was fought a celebrated battle in 1459, between Margaret of Anjou and Richard, duke of York, the latter of whom was slain, and buried at a short distance from the town, in a spot near which his gold ring was discovered a few years ago. During the parliamentary war Wakefield suffered severely, having been the scene of various military operations, and alternately in the hands of the royalist and parliamentary parties.

Description.—The town is situated on the north bank of the river Calder, on a sloping eminence, in the midst of a beautiful and fertile country. It consists of well-paved streets, built with considerable regularity, lighted with gas, and containing many handsome houses, chiefly of brick. The supply of water is excellent and good. The houses on the northern side are most modern, and in many instances surrounded with shrubberies and gardens.—Here is a theatre, which is usually opened in August by a company from York. In Wood-street is a handsome structure, containing a library and news-room, with rooms for concerts and assemblies. Here are phrenological, literary, and philosophical societies; and a masonic lodge for the west riding, of which the earl of Mexborough is provincial grand-master.—The market-place is not of great extent, in consequence of which, the corn-market is held in the broad street called West-gate. In the centre is the market-cross, a handsome Doric structure, erected by subscription about the beginning of last century. It consists of an open colonnade, surmounted by a dome, under which is a spacious room, in which the public business of the town is transacted. The river is here crossed by a handsome stone-bridge of nine arches, erected in the reign of Edward III. At the eastern end is a chapel, erected by Edward IV. on the site of a more ancient structure, in memory of his father, the duke of York, and his followers, who were slain in the battle of Wakefield. It is in the later style of English architecture, and about 30 feet long by 18 broad; the eastern window, which overhangs the river, is of remarkably elegant design. The western front is highly decorated, and divided into compartments by buttresses; which is surmounted by a sculptured entablature, representing various scriptural subjects. It was dedicated to the Virgin Mary, and endowed with £10 per annum for two chaplains; but at the dissolution, in the reign of Henry VIII., the revenue was taken away. This beautiful chapel has been much dilapidated.

Government.—The town is under the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, but its local affairs are superintended by a chief constable appointed by the inhabitants. The quarter-sessions for the west riding are held here, and the petty-sessions for the district. An attempt is now making to get the assizes for the west riding held here. The lord of the manor holds, through his steward, a court for petty causes and small debts once in three weeks.—Here is the house of correction for the west riding, an extensive structure, capable of containing 307 prisoners in separate cells; it contains a tread-mill for grinding corn, a school for children, and a chapel. The prisoners are chiefly employed in weaving.—Here are the register-office and the office of the clerk of the peace for the west riding.—Friday is market-day. A large market for cattle and sheep is held every alternate Wednesday. Fairs for horses, hardware, horned cattle, &c., are held on July 4th and 5th, and Nov. 11th and 12th. The reform act conferred the privilege on Wakefield of returning one member to parliament. The number of electors is about 800. Pop., in 1801, 8131; in 1831, 12,232. A. P., £72,123.

Trade.—This town was formerly celebrated for the manufactures of woollen cloth and worsted yarn, but these have greatly declined. The chief trade of the town now consists in the export of corn, coal, and wool. The corn is grown in the neighbouring country, and consists chiefly of barley, of which much malt is made. A corn-exchange was erected in 1623, and there are now extensive granaries. All persons living in the soke of Wakefield, which comprehends Stanley, Sandal, Alverthorpe, Crigglestone, Horbury, and Ossett, are obliged to have their corn ground in the soke mill, which stands close to the bridge. Coal is brought in abundance from the neighbourhood by numerous railways. The river was made navigable in 1698 for barges; and great facilities for trade are afforded by its connexion with the Ouse and Humber, and also by the Aire and Calder navigation, which communicates with various canals, and thus opens a communication with the counties of Lincoln and Lancaster.

Living, &c.—The living is a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of York, rated at £29 19s. 2d., and in patronage of the lord-chancellor. The church—which is ded. to All Saints—was erected in the reign of Henry III., but has undergone many modern repairs and improvements; it is in a mixed style of English architecture, with a square embattled tower and octagonal spire, about 237 feet in height. The interior consists of a nave and aisles, divided by rows of clustered columns; between the nave and the chancel is a lofty screen, and at the west end of the nave is a beautiful font of considerable antiquity, above which a handsome canopy was erected in 1821. The living was originally a rectory, but became a vicarage in 1439. In 1652, Lady Camden founded an afternoon lectureship, which she endowed with £100 per ann., and placed in the hands of the master and wardens of the Mercers' company. An evening lectureship was established in 1801, and is supported by voluntary contributions. In 1792, a church, ded. to St John, was erected at an expense of £10,000. It was made parochial in 1815. Living, a curacy in the patronage of the vicar of All Saints. The parish also contains the chapelries of Stanley, Horbury, and Alverthorpe. The Roman Catholics, Unitarians, Primitive Methodists, and Society of Friends, have each one place of worship here; the Wesleyan Methodists and Independents two.

Benevolent Institutions, &c.—Here is a free grammar school for the children of all persons resident both in the town and parish; it was founded by Queen Elizabeth in 1594, and the endowment which arises from property exceeds £300 per annum; the governors are a corporate body, 14 in number. Forty scholars receive a classical education under two masters; the first of whom has a salary of £160, the other £80 per annum. Connected with the same establishment is a writing school, for admission to which a certain quarterly sum is paid. Boys who have been three years in this school are eligible to several exhibitions in the universities. The natives of the town have a preference over those of the parish, and these over residents. Two of these exhibitions are in Clare-hall, Cambridge, and were founded by Thomas Cave; one to Queen's college, Oxford, was founded by Lady Elizabeth Hastings; and three of £50 per annum each, to either university, were founded by John Storie. Dr Richard Bentley, Dr John Potter, archbishop of Canterbury, and Dr John Radcliffe, were educated in this school.—Here a Green-coat school for 75 boys and 50 girls, endowed with upwards of £600 per annum, was founded in 1707.—Here are two national and one Lancasterian schools, supported by voluntary contributions; as also a school of industry.—Upwards of £700 per annum, arising from property bequeathed in 1722 by John Bromley, is applied to the clothing and apprenticing of poor boys, and to the relief of indigent housekeepers. In 1832, a new seminary of education was founded at Wakefield, under the name of 'The West-Riding Proprietary School.' It is intended to remedy the expense and inconvenience long consequent upon the want of a seminary for the liberal education of youth in the west riding of Yorkshire, and bids fair to realize the most sanguine expectations of its projectors. The property of the school is held in 240 equal shares, and the average annual expense of each scholar will not, it is calculated, exceed £10.—Here are a dispensary and fever-house; also the lunatic asylum for paupers of the west riding, which is a handsome structure, erected in 1817, and capable of containing 250 patients. At Stanley and Horbury are mineral springs, possessing qualities similar to those of Harrowgate and Cheltenham. Among the celebrated natives of this town, were Dr Thomas Gouch, a learned divine; Joseph Bingham, M. A., author of 'Origines Ecclesiasticæ'; and Dr John Burton, author of 'Monasticum Eboracense.' Distance of Wakefield from London, 182 m. N.N.W., and from York, 32 m. S.W. by S.

WAKELEY, an extra-parochial liberty in the hundred of Edwinstree, co. of Hertford. "This hamlet, which came afterwards to the possession of the church of the Holy Trinity in London, was a parish of itself, had a parochial church in it, and some of the canons did officiate there till the dissolution of that priory when it came to the crown. This church was a free chapel, founded by John Morley, of the county of Sussex, and dedicated to the honour of St Giles. It was worth, in rent and farm, with the offerings and tithes of hay and corn, and other profits belonging to it, one year with another, four shillings, and in tithes eight shillings, with seven acres and one rood of glebe; but when this manor came to the crown, the cure was neglected, the church fell to decay, and the tithes and profits of the church were granted by the king to the lords of the manor, who have ever since enjoyed them with it."—Chauney's Herts. Pop., in 1801, 7.

WALDEN-CASTLE, Essex. Gross quotes from Morant the following account of this castle:—"This castle was begun by Geoffrey de Mandeville, who came over with William I., and so distinguished himself that William rewarded him with no less than 118 lordships, of which 40 were in this county; Walden was one of them. It became afterwards the head of the barony, and descended to his son William, who, joining with the Empress Maude, King Stephen caused him to be arrested at court, then, A.D. 1143, held at St Albans. In order to obtain his liberty he surrendered his castles of Walden and Plasius;—Geoffrey, his second son, had his father's estates restored to him, and they remained in the family till the extinction of the male line." Coming into the Bohun family, they passed to Henry IV., who married a female of that family, and continued in the hands of the crown till Henry VIII. granted them to Thomas Audeley." From the lord Audeley this manor, castle, and other great estates hereabouts, devolved to the noble family of Howard, earls of Suffolk, and in 1777 the manor of Walden and castle belonged to Sir John Griffin Griffin, having descended to him from a female of that family. The keep of this castle, stripped of its outside stones, is still remaining. Morant says, there are also some earth-works and some of the walls about 30 feet high on the inside. "An hill called the bury, adjoining to the castle, was the mansion-house of the castle;" by this he probably means the mansion which Humphrey de Bohun had leave to embattle.

WALDEN (King's), a parish in the hundred of Hitchin-Pirton, co. of Hertford. Living, a donative, not in charge, in the patronage of W. Hale, Esq. Church ded. to St Mary. It is 5½ m. N.N.W. from Welwin. Pop., in 1801, 727; in 1831, 1004. A. P., £3,876.

Living, a vicarage in the archd. of St Alban's and dio. of London, rated at £10, returned at £64 0s. 4d., and in patronage of the dean and chapter of St Paul's, London. Church ded. to All Saints. The Baptists and Independents have places of worship here. Distance from Welwin, 5 m. N.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 758; in 1831, 1058. A. P., £3,598.

WALDEN-SAFFRON, or CHIPPING, a market-town and parish, locally situated in the hundred of Uttlesford, co. of Essex, but having separate jurisdiction. The name is said to be derived from two Saxon words, signifying a woody hill, and the appellation of Saffron is derived from the extensive culture of that plant in the neighbourhood. It was formerly called Waldenburgh. The situation of the town is peculiar, and is thus described by Dr Stukeley:—"A narrow tongue of land shoots itself out like a promontory, encompassed by a valley in the form of a horse-shoe, enclosed by distant and most delightful hills. On the bottom of the tongue stand the ruins of a castle, and on the top or extremity the church, round which, on the side of the hill and in the valley, is the town built, so that the bottom of the church is as high as the town, and seen above the tops of the houses." The town consists of several good streets; the houses of which are principally built of lath and plaster, and some of them are very ancient. The market-place is spacious, and contains a handsome town-hall. The pop. in 1801 was 3181; in 1831, 4762. A. P., £13,697. There is a considerable trade carried on in malt and barley. Saturday is market day, and fairs for horses and cows are held on the Saturday before Mid-Lent Sunday, and November 21st. The town is incorporated, having received its first charter from Edward VI. in 1549. The corporation was remodelled by a charter granted by William and Mary, and now consists of a mayor, recorder, 12 aldermen, deputy recorder, coroner, town-clerk, and other officers. The mayor, the former mayor, and the two senior aldermen, have magistral jurisdiction within the town, in concurrence with the magistrates of the county. Quarterly sessions are held here, and the court appears to possess the power of inflicting capital punishments, which has not been acted upon for more than a century past. The mayor and one of the aldermen hold a court every third week for the recovery of debts under £10. The county magistrates hold the petty sessions for the division in the town-hall here once a fortnight. Courts leet and baron, for the manors of Brook and Cheping-Walden, are also held here. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Colchester and dio. of London, rated at £33 6s. 8d., and in patronage of Lord Braybrooke. Church ded. to St Mary. The date of this structure is not exactly known; but it appears to have been founded in the reign of Henry VI., partly at the expense of Chancellor Audley, and partly of John Leche who was vicar, and who lies buried in the chancel. It is a spacious and elegant Gothic structure, consisting of a nave, chancel, and side aisles, and having an embattled tower at the west end. Several of the windows are richly decorated, and at the east window of the south chancel, is the tomb of Chancellor Audley constructed of black marble. Here are places of worship for Independents, general Baptists, Society of Friends, Wesleyan Methodists, and Unitarians. Here is a school with a small endowment, founded by John Leche and his sister, Johane Bradbury. To this school, all children born at Walden-Newport, Little Chesterford, and Widdrington, are free on paying an entrance fee of 4d. One hundred and forty children receive instruction on the national system. The master has a free house, and the income from the endowment amounts to £74. This school was made a royal foundation through the interest of Sir Thos. Smith, secretary to Edward VI., who was a native of the town, and received his early education here. Here is a national school for 100 girls. Sixteen almshouses for decayed housekeepers of each sex, were founded by Edward VI., with good endowments, and are under the management of the corporation. New buildings have recently been erected, the ancient ones having fallen into dilapidation. Lord Howard de Walden takes his title from this town. Here are remains of a castle, erected soon after the conquest by Geoffrey de Mandeville. In the vicinity are traces of an ancient embankment, nearly 700 feet square, the origin of which is unknown. "A priory of Benedictine monks was founded here by Geoffrey Mandeville, the first earl of Essex after the conquest, to the honour of St Mary and St James, in the year of our Lord 1136. In the time of Richard I., it became an abbey, and was valued, 26th Henry VIII., at £406 15s. 11d. After the suppression, it was granted to Sir Thomas Audley, who was thereupon created a baron, by the title of Lord Audley of Warden. Upon the site of this monastery, the earl of Suffolk in the time of James I., erected that stately mansion called Audley End."—Tanner's Not. Mon. This magnificent structure occupied thirteen years in building. It was regarded as the largest mansion in the kingdom, and although only one court is remaining, this small portion forms a splendid mansion. Distance from London, 42 m. N.N.E.

This village was passed by the Roman wall, and here are the sites of the stations called Vindolana and Aesica, in which many Roman antiquities have been discovered. Aesica, now called Great Chesters, is in a better state of preservation than any other Roman station on the wall. Here was formerly a castellated mansion, once the residence of the Ridleys, part of which was recently demolished, and the materials employed in constructing a modern residence, while the remainder was converted into a farm-house. Near the military stations are four tumuli; and on an adjoining hill is a rude monument, consisting of three large stones. Distance from Haltwhistle, 3 m. N.W. by W. Pop., in 1801, 89; in 1831, 96.

WALLASEY, or WALL-FLEET-ISLAND, forms part of the parishes of Canewdon, Eastwood, Paglesham, Great Stambridge, and Little Wackering, hundred of Rochford, co. of Essex. It is a peninsula, having been joined to the land by a short causeway, kept up at the expense of the parishes. It is 4 m. in length, and at the broadest $1\frac{1}{2}$ m. It is 6 m. E.N.E. from Rochfort.

WALLAZEY, a parish in the lower division of the hundred of Wirrall, co.-palatine of Chester; it contains the townships of Liscard, Poulton with Seacombe, and Wallazeey. This parish is in the form of a peninsula, and forms the north-west corner of the county. It is bounded on the west by the Irish sea, on the north-east by the river Mersey, and on the south-east by a branch of the Mersey called Wallazeey-Pool. This place is much frequented for sea-bathing, and has a commodious hotel for the accommodation of strangers, as well as many handsome houses and marine villas along the banks of the Mersey. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Chester, rated at £11 0s. 2½d., and in patronage of the bishop of Chester. One half of the great tithes are impropriated by the bishop of Chester, the other half belongs to the rector. The church is ded. to St Hilary, and was rebuilt about 70 years ago. There was anciently another church here, belonging to Birkenhead priory, of which no traces now exist. At the north-western point of the parish are a small light-house, and a strong fort mounting 15 guns. Here is a free grammar school for all boys of the parish, founded in 1666 by Major Henry Moles, and subsequently endowed with property which now yields £35 per annum, and with the interest of £100 which the master receives. The school-house was rebuilt in 1799.—Here is a steam-boat ferry to Liverpool. Races were formerly held here on a common called the Leasowes, but were discontinued about the year 1760. In the reign of Charles II., the unfortunate duke of Monmouth ran his horse here, and presented the plate which he won to the daughter of the mayor of Chester. Here is a gunpowder magazine, where all ships entering the port of Liverpool deposit their gunpowder before entering the docks. It is $10\frac{1}{2}$ m. N. by E. from Great Neston.

WALLERTHWAITE, a joint township with Markington, in the parish and liberty of Ripon, but locally situated in the wapentake of Claro, W. R. of the co. of York. It is 4 m. N.N.E. from Ripley.

WALLHAMPTON, a hamlet in the parish of Boldre, co. of Southampton.

WALLINGFORD, a borough and market-town, locally situated in the hundred of Moreton, co. of Berks, but having separate jurisdiction. It contains four parishes, with the extra-parochial liberty of the Castle, and the liberty of Clapcot. The name is supposed to be derived from the British word Gualles, or the Roman Vallum, combined with the circumstance of there having been a ford over the Thames at this place, which was anciently a Roman station. The name of this station is not known, but it is supposed to have been of considerable extent, and to have been the principal one in the country of the Attrebatii. It was subsequently an important fort belonging to the Saxons, but was burnt by the Danes in 1006. In the reign of Edward the Confessor it had become a royal prescriptive borough. Here was an important castle, which was occupied by the adherents of the Empress Matilda during the civil war in the reign of Stephen. It was in this castle that John afterwards met his barons. The honour of Wallingford was given by Richard I. to his brother John, but was annexed afterwards by act of parliament to the duchy of Cornwall. Cardinal Wolsey subsequently obtained a grant of the castle and manor, and conferred them on the college of Christ church, Oxford. During the parliamentary war it was again fortified, and held by the adherents of the king during nearly the whole of the war. It was finally demolished in 1653, and a small portion of the wall alone remains to mark its situation. The space of ground which it occupies is extra-parochial, and, in 1831, contained 14 inhabitants.

The town is situated on the western bank of the Thames, and on the road between Reading and Oxford. The streets are neat, well-paved, and lighted, and the supply of water is abundant. The river is here crossed by a stone-bridge about 300 yards in length, erected in 1809 on the site of an ancient structure, which had fallen into a state of dilapidation. Two bridgemasters are annually chosen from among the burgesses, and a fund of £42 per annum is set aside for its repair. The pop. in 1801 was 1744; in 1831, the parish of All Hallows contained 34 inhabitants; A. P., £236.—St Leonard's, 834 inhabitants; A. P., £1,136.—St Mary's, 1127 inhabitants; A. P., £2,618.—St Peter's, 454 inhabitants; A. P., £1,162.—Total, A. P., £5,152; total, pop., 2167. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in the making of malt, and in the trade in corn and flour to London and other places. It has canal communication through the Thames, with Bath, Bristol, and Birmingham. Tuesday and Friday are market-days, and fairs are held on the Tuesday before Easter, June 24th, September 29th, and December 17th. This town was a borough by prescription, and returned two members to parliament since the 23d Edward I. By the reform act its representation was reduced to one member; and the several parishes of Brightwell, Sotwell, North and South Moreton, Bensington, Crowmarsh, and Newnham-Murren, were united with it. The number of electors is about 500. The mayor is the returning officer.

The town was incorporated by an act of James I., but is at present governed under a charter given by Charles I. The government is vested in a mayor, high steward, recorder, six aldermen, eighteen assistants, two bailiffs, two bridgemen, and a chamberlain, with a town-clerk. The justices of the peace for the town possessing exclusive jurisdiction, are the mayor, aldermen, and recorder. The mayor is also coroner. Courts for small debts and courts of quarter session are held by the corporation,—the latter being formerly in power to inflict capital punishment, though its authority is now limited to transportation. The magistrates of the county hold the petty sessions for the division here every Friday. The borough contains the four parishes of All Hallows, St Peter, St Mary the More, and St Leonard. The living of All Hallows—the church of which was demolished in 1648—is a sinecure rectory, in the patronage of the master and fellows of Pembroke college, Oxford. —The living of St Peter is a discharged rectory, rated at £6 1s. 3d., and returned at £62, and, in 1829, in the patronage of H. Blackstone, Esq. The church was built in 1769, and in 1777 a square tower and elegant spire were added by subscription. The learned Sir William Blackstone was buried in this church. —The living of St Mary's is a discharged rectory, rated at £4, and returned at £86, and in patronage of the lord-chancellor. The church was erected in 1658, chiefly with materials obtained from the castle, on the tower of which is the figure of an armed knight on horseback, supposed to represent King Stephen. —The living of St Leonard's is a discharged rectory, to which is annexed the perpetual curacy of Sotwell, rated at £7 12s. 6d., and returned at £134, and in the patronage of the lord-chancellor. The church is a structure of great antiquity, presenting a few remains of Norman architecture; all these livings are in the archd. of Berks and dio. of Salisbury. The Baptists, Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, and Society of Friends, have places of worship here. Here is a free school in which six boys, selected by the aldermen, receive education on an endowment of £10 per annum, founded in 1659 by Walter Bigg, alderman of London. Another school was founded in 1672, at an expense of £32 10s., given by the fraternity of St John the Baptist, or the merchant tailors' company, London, with an endowment of £2 10s. for the master. Here is a charity school established in 1819 by subscription, in which 20 boys and 30 girls receive education and clothing. Here is also an infant school. In 1681, William Angier and Mary his sister, founded an almshouse for six poor widows, and endowed it with £34, which has been augmented by subsequent benefactions. Various Roman antiquities have been found here. The town gives the inferior title of viscount to the earl of Banbury. "The church of the Holy Trinity, within the west gate here, being given in the time of William I. to the abbey of St Alban, by Galfridus Camerarius, Paul the 14th abbot sent hither a convent of three Black monks, who, with their prior, were subordinate to that great monastery. The yearly revenue of this cell is not to be found in the valuations of the religious houses, 26th Henry VIII., because Cardinal Wolsey, commendatory abbot of St Albans, had, before that time, procured the pope's bull for the dissolution of this and other small monasteries, and had their lands bestowed on him by the king, 20th Henry VIII., with intent that he should settle the same on the famous new college he was about to build in Oxford. But by the forfeiture of that cardinal, that noble design was left unfinished, and this priory, with his other lands, came again to the crown; from whence it was granted, 38th Henry VIII., to John Norrea. —There was a dean and prebendaries in the king's free chapel, within the third dyke of the castle here, in the beginning of King John's reign, and probably before, which Edward, earl of Cornwall, 10th Edward I., endowed with lands and rents for the maintenance of six chaplains, six clerks, and four choristers; and its revenues were further augmented by Edward the Black prince and King Henry VI.; so that before the dissolution, its yearly income was rated at £147 8s. This college or free chapel was ded. to St Nicholas, and the site was granted, 2d Edward VI., to Michael Stanhope and John Bellew."—Tanner's Not. Mon. Distance from London, 46 m. W. by N.

WALLINGTON, a parish in the hundred of Odsey, co. of Hertford. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Huntingdon and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £16 15s. 24d., and in the patronage of the master of Emanuel college, Cambridge. The church is an ancient structure, ded. to St Mary. On the north side of the chancel are several altar-tombs, but in a very dilapidated condition. Here is a school in which some poor children are educated on an endowment of £5, given in 1736 by John Brown. Distance from Baldock, 3½ m. E. by S. Pop., in 1801, 224; in 1831, 213. A. P., £1,290.

WALLINGTON, a parish in the hundred of Clackclose, co. of Norfolk. Living, a rectory united with those of Holme and South Runcin, in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich, not in charge, and, in 1829, in the patronage of Mr Bell. The church, which is in ruins, was ded. to St Margaret. Pop., in 1801, 60; in 1831, 47. A. P., £1,291.

WALLINGTON, a hundred in the co. of Surrey. It lies on the eastern side of the co., and includes 12 parishes, with the towns of Casehorton and Croydon. Pop., in 1831, 24,647.

WALLINGTON, a hamlet in the parish of Beddington, co. of Surrey. It gives name to the hundred, and was anciently a place of great importance. Various relics of antiquity have been found here. Distance from Croydon, 3 m. W.S.W. Pop., in 1801, 793; in 1831, 933. A. P., £4,542.

WALLINGTON-DEMESNE, a township in the parish of Hartburn, co. of Northumberland. In 1775, when some workmen were employed in pulling down the remains of Fenwick tower in this township, an open stone chest was found, containing several hundred gold nobles of the reign of Edward III. It is 12½ m. W. by S. from Morpeth. Pop., in 1801, 161; in 1831, 183.

WALLINGWELLS, an extra-parochial liberty in the wapentake of Bassetlaw, co. of Nottingham. "Ralph de Capreocuria, or Cheurolcourt, in the time of Stephen, built and endowed a small Benedictine monastery to the honour of the Virgin Mary, which was valued at £87 lls. 6d., and granted, 6th Elizabeth, to Richard Pipe and Francis Bowyer."—Tanner's Not. Mon. In 1829, some stone-coffins were discovered, one of which contained the nearly perfect body of Margery Dourant, abbess in the reign of Richard I. On exposure to the air it rapidly decomposed. Distance from Worksop, 3½ m. N. by W. Pop., in 1801, 29; in 1831, 21.

WALLOP-NETHER, a parish in the hundred of Thorngate, Andover division of the co. of Southampton. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Winchester, rated at £13 13s. 4d., and in patronage of the dean and chapter of York. Church ded. to St Andrew. It contains the tything of Middle Wallop. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here. Here is a school in which 24 children receive instruction on an endowment of £17 per annum, founded in 1759 by F. Douce, Esq. Here are the remains of an encampment, fortified with lofty ramparts, and apparently of Danish origin, as its circular form, and the name of the hill, (Danebury), seem to indicate. Here are also several barrows. It is 4 m. W. by N. from Stockbridge. Pop., in 1801, 566; in 1831, 900. A. P., £6,433.

WALLOP-OVER, a parish in the hundred of Thorngate, Andover division of the co. of Southampton. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Winchester, rated at £27 6s. 2½d., and in 1829, in patronage of the earl of Portsmouth. Here is a school in which six poor children receive education on an endowment of £2 per annum, given by Mr Smith in 1796. Church ded. to St Peter. Distance from Stockbridge, 5½ m. W.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 435; in 1831, 478. A. P., £3,497.

WALDRIDGE, a township in the parish of Stamfordham, co. of Northumberland, consisting of a single farm-house.

WALLSEND, a parish in the eastern division of the ward of Castle, co. of Northumberland. It contains the townships of Howden, Pans, Wallsend, and Wellington. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Northumberland and dio. of Durham, not in charge, and in the patronage of the dean and chapter of Durham. Church ded. to St Peter. It was erected in 1807, at an expense of about £5000, of which £3,300 was raised by Tontine. The original parish church, which has been removed, was ded. to the Holy Cross. It is a large and well built town, situated on the north side of the river Tyne, near the Shields road. It contains many good houses, and there is a spacious green in the centre. Much coal is found in the neighbourhood, and it gives its name to an excellent variety, immense quantities of which are here shipped for the port of London. The inhabitants are partly employed in ship-building, and in the manufacture of coppers and earthenware. Here are also extensive lime-kilns. The Methodists have three places of worship here, and the Antiburghers one. Here is a school, with a house and garden for the master, founded by Mrs Stewart and Mrs Muncaster. Here are also well attended Sunday schools. This parish is situated at the eastern extremity of the wall of Severus, and was the Roman station called Legedum, which was garrisoned by the first cohort of the Lergi. It was a port and a great magazine for corn, and portions of the ancient quay yet remain. Various Roman antiquities have been exhumed in this neighbourhood. John Martin, the celebrated painter, was born here. Distance from Newcastle-upon-Tyne, 3½ m. E.N.E. Pop., in 1801, 3120; in 1831, 5510. A. P., £54,576.

WALMER, a parish in the hundred of Cornhill, lathe of St Augustine, co. of Kent. It is situated on the high road from London to Dover, and is a member of the port, and in the liberty of the town of Sandwich. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury, certified at £32, and returned at £124 18s., and in patronage of the archbishop of Canterbury. The church, ded. to St Mary, presents some specimens of Norman architecture. It was recently enlarged, and contains 280 free sittings. The town is much resorted to for sea-bathing, and contains many good houses and marine villas. Here are good barracks, but they are scarcely used. Close to the sea-shore stands Walmer castle, erected for the defence of the coast by Henry VIII., at the same time with those of Deal and Sandown. It commands a beautiful view, including the Downs, the straits of Dover, and the coast of France. This fortress is now appropriated for the residence of the lord-warden of the cinque-ports, and was recently fitted up. The fosse at the same time was converted into a garden. Distance from Deal, 2 m. S. Pop., in 1801, 775; in 1831, 1779. A. P., £4,053.

WALMERSLEY, a township in the parish of Bury, hundred of Salford, co.-palatine of Lancaster. The Independents have a place of worship here. The village stands on the river Irwell, and here are extensive spinning-mills which give employment to many of the inhabitants. Distance from Bury, 2 m. N. by E. Pop., in 1801, 2166; in 1831, 3456. A. P., £5,821.

WALMESFORD. See WANDSFORD.

WALMESLEY, a chapelry in the parish of Bolton, hundred of Salford, co.-palatine of Lancaster. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Chester, rated at £5 13s., and returned at £60, and in patronage of the vicar of Bolton-in-the-Moor. The Unitarians have a place of worship here. Here is a school with a small endowment, for which ten poor children receive education. The school-house was erected in 1716 by subscription, on a site given by Miles Lonsdale. Distance from Great Bolton, 4½ m. N. Pop. with the parish.

WALMESGATE, a parish in the hundred of Hill, parts of Lindsey, co. of Lincoln. Living, a perpetual curacy not in charge, in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln, and subordinate to the vicarage of Burwell. Distance from Spilsby, 8 m. N.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 51; in 1831, 72. A. P., £796.

WALNEY (ISLE OF), a chapelry in the parish of Dalton in Furness, hundred of Lonsdale, north of the Sands, co.-palatine of Lancaster. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester, rated at £9 14s., returned at £80, and in patronage of the vicar of Dalton. It is thus described by West in his "Antiquities of Furness":—"From Hawcoat, the look-down is on the Isle of Walney, the counterscarf of Furness, once covered with woods, now almost without a tree or shrub. The Isle of Walney lies on a bed of moss, and all round the island moss is found by digging through a layer of sand and clay which covers it; and in the moss large trees have been taken up. As it is only an island at high water, an industrious people would long since have joined it to the land by a sea-bank. The abbots of Furness charged themselves with the support of a dyke for its defence; but since the suppression of the abbey, the dyke has been neglected, and the sea has ravaged great part of it, and threatens more. The island is about ten miles in length, and one in breadth, and has the appearance of a bank or wall in the sea; hence it was called by the Saxons Waghney, Woney, or Walney, a walled island. It contains two hamlets, Biggar and Scate. The strong castle of the 'Pile of Fowdrey' stands on the northern extremity of the island, and is also insulated at high water. The castle and site belong to the ladies of the liberty of Furness." Here is a lighthouse. There are some curious intermitting springs in the island. It is 5 m. S.W. from Dalton. The pop. is returned with that of the parish.

WALPOLE, a parish in the hundred of Blything, co. of Suffolk. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich, rated at £11, and returned at £60, and, in 1829, in patronage of the Rev. B. Philpot. Church ded. to St Mary. The Independents have a place of worship here. The school has an endowment of £2 10s. for the benefit of poor children, given in 1704 by Thomas Neale. It is 2 m. S.W. from Halesworth. Pop., in 1801, 494; in 1831, 658. A. P., £1,927.

WALPOLE-ST-ANDREW, a parish in the Marshland division of the hundred of Freebridge, co. of Norfolk. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Norwich, rated at £26 13s. 4d., and, in 1829, in patronage of T. Hankinson, Esq. The church, which is ded. to St Andrew, is covered with lead. Many Roman antiquities have been found here. Here was a great wall raised by the Romans to guard against the encroachments of the sea. Distance from Lynn-Regis, 8½ m. W. by S. Pop., in 1801, 227; in 1831, 514.

WALPOLE-ST-PETER, a parish in the Marshland division of the hundred of Freebridge, co. of Norfolk. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Norwich, rated at £21, and in patronage of the lord-chancellor. The church, which is regarded as one of the most beautiful parochial churches in England, was erected in the reign of Henry VI., and ded. to St Peter. It consists of a chancel, nave, and two side aisles, with 13 windows on each side, containing some good specimens of stained glass. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here. Distance from Lynn-Regis, 9 m. W. by S. Pop., in 1801, 730; in 1831, 1237. A. P., with that of Walpole-St-Andrew, £16,799.

WALRIDGE, a township in the parish of Stamfordham, co. of Northumberland.

WALRIDGE, a township in the parish of Chester-le-Street, co.-palatine of Durham.

WALSALL, a parish in the southern division of the hundred of Offlow, co. of Stafford. It comprises the market-town of Walsall, the chapelry of Bloxwich, and the township of Walsall Foreign. The name is supposed to have been derived from its situation in or near an extensive forest, in which the Druids celebrated their religious rites. It was fortified in the early part of the tenth century, by Ethelfleda, daughter of Alfred, and was a royal demeane at the time of the conquest. It was visited by Queen Elizabeth in the 28th year of her reign, and in 1643, by Henrietta Maria, queen of Charles I. The town is situated on the eminence of a hill, at the foot of which flows a small stream, falling shortly after into the river Tame. It consists of several handsome streets, containing many excellent modern houses. The streets have been lighted with gas since 1824, and are well-paved; and there are many agreeable villas in the neighbourhood. There is a subscription library, with reading and news-rooms for the reception of which a splendid edifice has recently been erected. Races are held annually in the week before Michaelmas day, at which period assemblies are held in the principal hotels.—The town communicates with a branch of the Old Birmingham canal, and with the Wireley and Essington canal, and there are passage-boats to Birmingham twice a-week. The supply of coal is abundant, and limestone is quarried to a considerable extent in the vicinity. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in the manufacture of bridle-bits, stirrups, spurs, saddletrees, spoons, snuffers, buckles, plated ware, locks, coach-harness, and the like; and there are several brass and iron foundries. Here is also a considerable trade in malt. Tuesday is market-day; and fairs for horses, cattle, and cheese, are held on February 24th, Whit-Tuesday, and the Tuesday before old Michaelmas-day.—The town was incorporated by Henry I., who granted the inhabitants various immunities and privileges, among which may be mentioned exemption from toll throughout England, and from serving upon juries out of the limits of the parish. The town is at present governed under a charter of 13th of Charles II., by a mayor, recorder, and 23 burgesses, with a town-clerk, two sergeants-at-mace, and other officers. The mayor, who is annually elected by the burgesses, the late mayor, the recorder, and two senior burgesses, have magisterial jurisdiction within the parish, and hold courts of quarter-session for all but capital offences. They are also entitled to hold a court of record for the recovery of debts under £20. The high sheriff of the county appoints a steward, who holds the small debt court for the hundred here. Constables and other officers are appointed at the annual court-leet of the lord of the manor. The town-hall is an ancient building, in which the courts are held and public business transacted. Here is a gaol capable of containing 10 prisoners. Pop., in 1801, 5177; in 1831, 6401. A. P., £6,692. The remaining returns of the parish are included under Walsall-foreign.

The living is a vicarage in the archd. of Stafford and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, rated at £10 19s. 7d., and, in 1829, in the patronage of the Rev. P. Pratt. The church—which is ded. to St Matthew, or All Saints—was erected in 1821 at an expense of £20,000, and contains 767 free sittings. It is a handsome cruciform structure, in the later style of English architecture, having several chapels in the aisles. The tower and chancel belonged to the previous ancient structure.—Here is a chapel erected in 1826, and ded. to St Paul. Living, a perpetual curacy, not in charge, and in patronage of the governors of the free grammar school.—The Roman Catholics, Wesleyan Methodists, Independents, and Unitarians, have places of worship here.—Here is a free grammar school, founded and endowed in 1557 by Queen Mary, who placed it under the control of certain governors, to whom she granted a charter of incorporation. The school is open to all boys of the parish, and the income is about £780 per annum. There are four masters, the first of whom is minister of St Paul's chapel, and receives a salary of £220 per annum; the other masters have respectively the salaries of £180, £80, and £60. The remainder of the funds are appropriated towards the support of an English free school for 120 boys, and also a preparatory school for children of both sexes, who are taught by two schoolmistresses.—Here is a national school, chiefly supported by subscription, with which has been incorporated the Blue-coat charity school, in which 25 children of each sex receive education on an endowment of £19 4s.—Here are also various Sunday schools, one of which is endowed with £12 per annum.—Here are almshouses for six aged widows, founded in the reign of James I., and endowed with £40 per annum by Mr John Harper. Additional almshouses for eleven aged widows were erected and endowed in 1825. The endowment of these almshouses consists of the dole of one penny, which was wont to be paid by the corporation on the eve of the Epiphany, to every person in the parishes of Rushall and Walsall. This dole was paid from the rental of a manor and estates in the county of Warwick, given to the corporation in the reign of Henry, by Mr Thomas Mollesley. Here are also various charitable bequests for the apprenticing of children, and for the relief of the poor. An annual feast is held by the mayor on St Clement's day, when the tenants of the corporation pay their rents. Distance from London, 118 m. N.W.

WALSALL-FOREIGN, a township in the above parish. Pop., in 1801, 5222; in 1831, 6665. A. P., £10,231.

WALSDEN, a township in the parish of Rochdale, co.-palatine of Lancaster. Distance from Haslingden, 10 m. E. Pop. returned with that of the chapelry of Todmorden.

WALSHAM, a hundred in the co. of Norfolk, containing 12 parishes. Pop., in 1831, 4525; of which 2287 were males, and 2238 females.

WALSHAM (NORTH), a market-town and parish in the hundred of Tunstead, co. of Norfolk. It stands on the high-road to Norwich, and consists of three neat streets, diverging from a central area. In the year 1600 this town suffered severely from a fire, which, though but of short duration, consumed property to the value of not less than £20,000.—Here is a theatre, which is opened once in two years. A silk manufactory was recently established; and the canal from Antingham to Yarmouth passes in the vicinity, a short distance to the north-east. Thursday is market-day; and a fair for cattle is held on the day before Holy Thursday. In the centre of the market-place is a cross, erected in the reign of Edward III., by Bishop Threlby; which Bishop Redman caused to be repaired after the great fire in 1600. The magistrates for the hundred hold petty-sessions for the division here every week, and annual courts-baron are held by the bishop of Norwich and Lord Suffolk.—Living, a vicarage, to which is annexed the rectory of Antingham-St-Margaret, in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich, rated at £8, and in patronage of the bishop of Norwich. The church is a spacious structure, ded. to St Mary, situated in the central area of the town; the tower is in ruins, having fallen in the year 1724. About a mile to the south of the town is a stone cross, erected to commemorate a victory which Spencer, bishop of Norwich, obtained over some rebels headed by a dyer named Leycester. The Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists, the Society of Friends, and the Independents, have places of worship here. Here is a free grammar school, founded by Sir William Paston, to whose memory a monument has been erected in the chancel of the church. The endowment amounts to £300 per annum, arising from the rents of several estates at Horsey and Walcot, with an endowment of £4 15s. given by some unknown person. Forty children belonging to the hundreds of North Erpingham, Happing, Flegg, and Tunstead, receive education here; the master has a free house with a salary of £70 per annum; there is also an usher with a salary of £30, and a lecturer with £10. Lord Nelson received part of his early education at this school. Here is likewise a Sunday school conducted on the national plan. Distance from London, 123 m. N.E. by N., and from Norwich, 15 m. N.N.E. Pop., in 1801, 1959; in 1831, 2615. A. P., £6,253.

WALSHAM (SOUTH), a village in the hundred of Walsham, co. of Norfolk. It contains two parishes. Living of St Lawrence in the archd. and dio. of Norwich, rated at £13 6s. 8d., and in patronage of the president and fellows of Queen's college, Cambridge. That of St Mary's is a discharged vicarage, rated at £5, returned at £130, and in patronage of the mayor and aldermen of the city of Norwich, but lately, by lapse, the bishop of Norwich presented. The church of St Lawrence has long since disappeared. Distance from Acle, 3 m. N.W. by W. Pop., in 1801, 500; in 1831, 571. A. P., £4,435.

WALSHAM-IN-THE-WILLOWS, a parish in the hundred of Blackbourne, co. of Suffolk. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich, certified at £12, returned at £39, and, in 1829, in patronage of John Sparke, Esq. Church ded. to St Mary. The Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists have places of worship here. The school has a small endowment for the benefit of poor children, bequeathed in 1632 by William Withers. Distance from Stow-Market, 9 m. N.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 993; in 1831, 1167. A. P., £3,661.

WALSHCROFT, a hundred in the parts of Lindsey, co. of Lincoln. It contains 24 parishes, and the pop., in 1831, was 7715, of which 3871 were males, and 3744 females.

WALSHFORD, a joint township with Great Ribston, in the parish of Hunsingore, upper division of the wapentake of Claro, W. R. of the co. of York. It is within the jurisdiction of the manorial court of Hunsingore. Distance from Weatherby, $3\frac{1}{2}$ m. N. by E. Pop., in 1801, 121; in 1831, 152. A. P., £1,994.

WALSINGHAM (GREAT), a parish in the northern division of the hundred of Greenhoe, co. of Norfolk. It contains the united parishes of All Saints and St Peter, and was formerly a place of much greater importance, containing three churches. The united livings form a donative curacy in the archd. and dio. of Norwich, not in charge, returned at £18 2s. 9d., and, in 1829, in the patronage of H. Lee Warner, Esq. The church is an elegant Gothic structure, remarkable for its fine proportions. Distance from Little Walsingham, $1\frac{1}{2}$ m. N. by E. Pop., in 1801, 289; in 1831, 434. A. P., £2,726.

WALSINGHAM (LITTLE, or NEW), a parish, formerly a market-town, in the northern division of the hundred of Greenhoe, co. of Norfolk. It is situated in a picturesque and rugged valley, on the banks of a rivulet, at the distance of 7 miles from the sea. The market has fallen into disuse; and a fair is held on the second week after Whit-Monday. The magistrates of the county hold the quarter-sessions here by adjournment from the city of Norwich. Here is a house of correction, which has recently been considerably enlarged. Saffron was formerly grown to a considerable extent in this neighbourhood, but the culture has been abandoned. The family of De Grey takes the title of baron from this place.—Living, a donative curacy in the archd. and dio. of Norwich, not in charge, returned at £24 9s. 1d., and, in 1829, in the patronage of H. Lee Warner, Esq. The church is ded. to St Mary, and contains some fine monuments of considerable antiquity. It is a spacious structure, and contains an ancient font of an octagonal form, on which are sculptured representations of the seven sacraments of the church of Rome and the crucifixion. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here. Here is a free grammar school in which 30 boys are educated, by a master and usher, on an endowment of £110 per annum, arising from an estate in Great Shoring, given in 1639 by Richard Bond, Esq. Here are eight almshouses for poor persons and their families. "Here was an house of Franciscan, or Grey friars, founded about the year 1346, by Elizabeth de Burgo, countess of Clare, the foundress of Clare-hall in Cambridge. It had houses and gardens valued at £3 per annum, which, with the site of the friary, were granted, 36th Henry VIII., to John Eyer. Robert Pigot, of Little Walsingham, by his will, dated 1492, gave an house in or near this town for the use of two leprous persons of good families; and from that time the hospital or Lazar-house of Walsingham is often mentioned in the old will-books. The famous chapel here—ded. to the annunciation of our lady—was built, A. D. 1061, by the widow of Richoldis de Favarchis, in imitation of that of Nazareth, and therein was placed a prior and convent of Black canons by her son Geoffrey, in the time of William the Conqueror, by whose endowment and that of other benefactors, the possessions belonging to this monastery were raised to £446 14s. 4d. per annum, besides the offerings to our lady, valued in our manuscript at £260 12s. 4d. per annum, but in another to £26 15s. only. The site of this religious house was granted, 31st Henry VIII., to Thomas Sidney."—Tanner's Not. Mon. Judging from the amount of the offerings, this shrine appears to have been in as great repute as that of our lady of Loretto, or St Thomas à Becket at Canterbury. Several of the sovereigns of England are named among the pilgrims who visited it, and among the rest Henry VIII. walked hither barefoot from Barsham, to present a necklace of great value at the shrine. Some fine ruins of this magnificent priory still exist in the pleasure grounds of H. L. Warner, Esq. It is 28 m. N. from Norwich. Pop., in 1801, 1004; in 1831, 1067. A. P., £2,553.

WALSOKEN, a parish in the Marshland division of the hundred of Freebridge, co. of Norfolk. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Norwich, rated at £30 13s. 4d., and, in 1829, in the patronage of Mrs Allington. The church is a handsome structure, ded. to All Saints, having a lofty spire. Here is said to have been anciently a college, or hospital. This parish is very agreeably situated, and the walks in the vicinity are much frequented by the inhabitants of the town of Wisbeach, to which it is adjacent. Pop., in 1801, 705; in 1831, 1856. A. P., £9,892.

WALTERSTON, a hamlet in the parish of Llancarfan, hundred of Dinas-Powis, co. of Glamorgan, South Wales. This is a place of considerable antiquity, having been founded by Walter de Mapes, chaplain to Henry I., and an eminent writer and critic. Distance from Cowbridge, 4 m. S.E. Pop. returned with that of the parish.

WALTERSCOTE, a hamlet in the parish of Weeverham, co.-palatine of Chester.

WALTERSTONE, a parish in the hundred of Ewyas-Lacy, co. of Hereford. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Brecon and dio. of St David's, rated at £3, and, in 1829, in patronage of the earl of Orford. Chapel ded. to St Peter. Distance from Hereford, 15 m. S.W. by W. Pop., in 1801, 143; in 1831, 149. A. P., £977.

WALTHAM, a hundred in the co. of Essex, bounded on the west by the river Lea, and on the north by the river Stort. It contains five parishes, and the pop., in 1831, was 8351, of which 4172 were males, and 4179 females.

WALTHAM, or TEMPLE-WALTHAM, in the hundred of Bridge and Petham, lathe of St Augustine, co. of Kent. Living, a discharged vicarage, united with that of Petham, in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury, rated at £7 15s. 5d., and in the alternate patronage of the archbishop of Canterbury and Sir J. Honeywood. Distance from Canterbury, 7 m. S.S.W. Pop., in 1801, 383; in 1831, 572. A. P., £3,239. The population returns for this parish include the inmates of a workhouse, containing the poor of 12 parishes.

WALTHAM, a parish in the wapentake of Bradley-Haverstoe, parts of Lindsey, co. of Lincoln. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £15 10s. 10d., and in patronage of the chapter of the collegiate church of Southwell. Church ded. to All Saints. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here. Distance from Great Grimsby, 4 m. S. by W. Pop., in 1801, 385; in 1831, 545. A. P., £2,677.

WALTHAM.ABBEY, or HOLY-CROSS,

a market-town and parish in the hundred of Waltham. This is a large irregular town, situated near the river Lea, which is here separated into diverse streams, and skirted by low meadows, which have long been celebrated for the succulent and nourishing qualities of the grass. The various streams of the river Lea in this neighbourhood are traditionally said to flow on the same channels that were made by King Alfred, when he diverted the current of the river, and left the Danish fleet on shore. They are now partly occupied by government for the use of the gunpowder-mills and other works which have been erected here, and which give employment to many of the inhabitants. Here are several malt-kilns, a flour-mill, an extensive silk factory, and a pin manufactory. Courts leet and baron are annually held on Whit-Monday. Tuesday is market-day; and fairs for horses, cows, and hogs, are held on May 14th and September 25th and 26th.—Living, a donative curacy, a peculiar of the dio. of London, not in charge, returned at £100, and in patronage of certain trustees. The church is ded. to the Holy Cross and St Lawrence, and consists of the nave of the old abbey church. The Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists have places of worship here. Here is a free school for 15 boys and 8 girls. About 20 boys and 10 girls receive clothing and education in the Leverton school, which was founded in 1824 by Mrs Rebecca Leverton. This school has an interest in the reversion of £6,000, 3 per cent. consolidated annuities, bequeathed by Thomas Leverton, Esq. Here are four almshouses, founded in 1626 by Mr Green, in which eight poor widows reside, and receive small weekly sums. There are several other benefactions for the use of the poor. Pop., in 1801, including the hamlets of Holy-Field, Leawardstone, and Uphire, 3040; in 1831, 4104. A. P., £24,886.

The convent of Waltham appears to have been originally founded by Tovi, standard-bearer to Canute, king of England. This officer built a hunting seat in the forest, near which he formed a village, placing in it "threescore and six dwellers," and it was probably after he had completed this settlement that he founded the church. The place was called Waltham from the Saxon Weald-ham, a dwelling on the forest or wild; and from a cross, with a figure of our Saviour upon it, said to have been found at Montacute, and brought hither, was derived the adjunct name of Holy Cross. In the hands of the priests of Waltham, this crucifix manifested miraculous powers; and among the wonders told, one is, that Harold, the son of Earl Godwin, in consequence of a visit to it was cured of the palsy, whereupon he rebuilt the church, increased the number of canons to twelve, settled on them ample estates, and provided for the establishment of a school of learning at Waltham.

"Farmer, in his 'History of Waltham,' gives an account of the foundation of this convent somewhat different from the preceding. 'Tovi, the original founder of Waltham abbey, had a son named Athelstan, who proved a prodigal, and quickly spent all the goods and great estates which his father had got together; so that by some transaction this place returned to the crown.' 'Edward the Confessor then bestowed Waltham, with the lands thereabouts, on Harold, his brother-in-law, who was then only an earl, and son to Earl Godwin, who immediately built and endowed there a monastery.' It is further stated by this author, that each of the canons had one manor appropriated for his support, and that the dean had six, making in all seventeen. Harold is commonly stated by historians to have been killed at the battle of Hastings, and interred in Waltham abbey, where, during a long period, a tomb was shown as the sepulchral monument of the last of our Saxon kings. Mr Palgrave, in his recently published History of England, seems to have considered the tomb at Waltham, which he says had on it an effigy, with the inscription, 'Hic jacet Harold Infelix,' as merely a cenotaph; but Fuller, in his 'Church History,' gives a circumstantial account of the opening of this monument towards the end of Elizabeth's reign, and the discovery within it of the skeleton of a man. William the Norman, as might have been expected, showed no favour to the religious foundation of his vanquished rival. He forcibly took away from the church of Holy Cross a quantity of valuable plate, gems, and rich vestments; but fortunately for the canons he seems to have left them in possession of all their estates and revenues. Henry II. utterly dissolved the foundation of dean and eleven canons at Waltham, (as is stated in his charter,) on account of the lewdness and debauchery of their lives. Guido Rufus, who was the last dean of Waltham, resigned his deanery in 1177 to the king's commissioners. This preliminary proceeding having taken place, the king visited Waltham on the eve of Pentecost, when 16 regular canons of the order of St Augustine, namely, six of Cirencester, six of Oseney, and four of Chichester, were inducted into the church, and Walter de Gaunt, a canon of Oseney, was constituted the first abbot of the new foundation. The church was at the same time declared exempt from episcopal jurisdiction; and Pope Lucius III. subsequently by his bull confirmed to this monastery the exemption from all episcopal jurisdiction. The church thus settled was dedicated first to the Holy Cross, and afterwards to St Lawrence. Henry II. not only confirmed to the canons their right to the lands given by Harold and others, but he also added to their possessions the manors of Siwardston and Epping; using the remarkable expression, that it was fit that 'Christ, his spouse, should have a new dowry.' Richard I. gave a new charter confirming former grants, and another charter bestowing on the canons his whole manor of Waltham, with the great wood and park called Harold's Park, 300 acres of assart land, the market of Waltham, the village of Nasing, a member of Waltham, and 160 acres of assart land there,—they paying yearly to his exchequer £60, in lieu of all services. He made further additions to their property by subsequent charters, and they obtained various valuable grants from other benefactors in the same reign. Henry III. not only greatly augmented the privileges of Waltham church, but also bestowed on it many rich gifts, and frequently made the abbey his place of residence. When Simon de Seham was abbot, in the 30th Hen. III., (1245,) a dispute arose between the abbot and the townsmen of Waltham about the common land. 'The men of Waltham,' says Farmer, 'came into the marsh, which the abbot and his convent formerly enjoyed as several to themselves, and killed four mares worth 40s. sterling at least, and drove away all the rest: the abbot was politically pleased for the present not to take notice thereof.'—Similar offences were again committed, and at length fearing that they should be prosecuted, they desired a 'love-day,' and offered to pay damages for the injury committed; but instead of doing so they went to London, and accused the abbot to the king of having wrongfully taken away their common land, and bringing up new customs, adding that he would 'eat them up to the bone.' The abbot then excommunicated the men of Waltham, and they implored him at common law for appropriating their common land to himself. They were unsuccessful, and after a long suit in the king's bench, were glad to confess that they had done wrong, and they were amerced 20 marks, which the abbot remitted, and, on their submission, he absolved them from the excommunication. Stowe, in his account of the rebellion under Wat Tyler, says, the king, Richard II., while it lasted, was 'now at London, now at Waltham.' In 1444, the Campanile of Waltham abbey church was struck by lightning. The last event of importance recorded of Waltham, prior to the Reformation, was the accidental meeting of Thomas Cranmer, afterwards archbishop of Canterbury, with Fox and Gardiner, which ended so remarkably in the advancement of the former, and produced such an important series of still proceeding consequences in the affairs both of church and state. On the surrender of Waltham abbey to the king's commissioners in the year 1539, 31st of Henry VIII., the gross amount of the revenues was £1,079 12s. 1d. annually, according to Speed; and the clear income, according to Dugdale, £900 4s. 3d. Waltham was one of the convents whose superiors were mitred parliamentary barons, and its abbots, in respect to precedence, held the twentieth place among them in parliament. Abbot Fuller may be reckoned among the literati of this monastery, and from his 'history,' the fair manuscript of which was in the possession of the earl of Carlisle, Fuller, his namesake, professes faithfully to have compiled almost all the materials for his account of 'Waltham abbey,' subjoined to his 'Church History of Britain.' Edward the Sixth, in his first year, anno 1547, granted the conventual estate at Waltham to Sir Anthony Denny for 31 years, and on the knight's decease within a year or two afterwards, his widow purchased the reversion in fee. It subsequently came into the possession of the family of Sir William Wake, Bart., the present lord of the manor. Though the buildings of Waltham abbey were once so extensive as to include a space of many acres, scarcely any part remains but the nave of the abbey church, now the parochial church, an attached chapel on the south side, called the Lady Chapel, now a school-room and vestry; some ruinous walls, a small bridge and gateway, near the abbey-mills, and a dark vaulted structure of two divisions connected with the convent garden, and which adjoined the abbey-house inhabited by the Denny's. Originally the abbey church was a very magnificent building, and its curious remains must be regarded as the earliest undoubted specimen of the Norman style of architecture now existing in England. Sufficient is known of this structure, to state that its original form was that of a cross, and that a square tower, which 'contained a ring of five great tuneable bells,' arose from the intersection of the nave and transept; the two great western supporters of which are connected with and partly wrought into the present east end. The lady chapel, or vestry and school-room, which is probably of Henry the Third's time, is supported by graduated buttresses, ornamented with elegantly formed niches. Beneath it is a crypt, now a charnel-house, 'the fairest,' says Fuller, 'that ever I saw;' the roof of which is sustained by groined arches. The super-structure, or school-room, has been so much modernized, that scarcely a vestige of its ancient character remains. The present tower, which is a massive stone fabric, embattled and supported by strong buttresses, stands at the west end of the church. It rises to the height of 86 feet, and was erected about the year 1558. The entrance from the tower to the interior of the church is evidently of a date long anterior to the tower itself. There can indeed be little hesitation in assigning its construction to the latter part of Henry the Third's reign; the sculptured foliage of the capitals on each side, the form of the arch, and the general character of the decorations being evidently characteristic of that period. In all probability this doorway existed in Harold's original church. The church estates, which are vested in trustees for repairing and maintaining the church, consist of meadow and arable lands and two dwelling-houses, the present annual receipts being stated at £91 14s. The interior of this church consists of a nave and two aisles; the east end of the former being railed in as the chancel. The length is 106 feet, and its breadth, including the aisles, is 53 feet; the tower is 15 feet square. Independently of its founder Harold, many persons of eminent rank were interred in this church in the monastic times. Hugh Nevil, protho-forester of England, who died 'full of years,' anno 1222, was, according to Matthew Paris, buried here. His son also, John Nevil, the successor to his revenues and offices; and Robert Passelew, archdeacon of Lewes, a despised and discarded minion of Henry III., who died at his house at Waltham, in the year 1252, were also among the number of those interred here. Near the altar rails is a defaced grey slab, which is indented with a mitred figure; this, with two or three brass plates of Queen Elizabeth's time, are the oldest memorials which now remain. Near the east end of the south aisle is a mural monument for Sir Edward Denny, Knt. In the north aisle is a large altar tomb, the front of which displays a ship under sail, sculptured in bas-relief, in alabaster, and the ends, shields of arms, &c., in memory of Captain R. Smith. Against the wall of the north aisle is an inscribed tablet in white marble, with a small figure of an angel mourning over an urn, in memory of Thomas Leveiton, Esq. The last sepulchral memorial we shall particularize is a mutilated effigy of a female, placed in a corner of the north aisle, but to whom related, or how named, is now forgotten: it is probably of Henry the Eighth's time. Some idea of the former extent of this church may be conceived from stating, that the ancient tomb, considered to be King Harold's, was situated about forty yards from the present termination of the building, in the eastern part of the original choir. Near the abbey mill, which is still occupied for grinding corn, is a wide space of ground surrounded by small dwellings called the Bramblings, but formerly Romeland, which is conjectured to have been so called from its rents being, in former times, appropriated to the use of the holy see. On this spot King Henry VIII. is reported to have had a small pleasure-house, which he frequently occupied on his visits to Waltham. The gateway and bridge are a little to the northward of the abbey mills. The former is of stone, but has been repaired with bricks of a remarkably large scantling. It exhibits two pointed arches, a larger and a smaller one. The outer-mouldings of the large arch rest on corbels, formed by two demi-angels supporting shields, on which, but much corroded, are the royal arms of Edward the Third's time, viz., France and England quarterly. Beyond the gateway, about 200 yards to the north-eastward, near a small farm-house, is a dilapidated stone-bridge crossing another branch of the river, supported by three strong ribs of an elliptical form."—Graphic Illustrator, part vii. WALTHAM (BISHOP'S), a parish and market-town in the hundred of Bishop's Waltham, Portdown division of the co. of Southampton. Living, a rectory in the peculiar jurisdiction of the incumbent, rated at £26 12s. 8d., and in patronage of the bishop of Winchester. Church ded. to St Peter. Friday is market day, and fairs for horses, cheese, pedlery, stockings, and toys, are held on the second Friday in May, July 30th, and the first Friday after Old Michaelmas day. The bishop of Winchester holds a manorial court, at which a bailiff is annually appointed for the regulation of the internal affairs of the town. Near the village is the source of the river Hamble, which passes through the piece of water termed Waltham pond, formerly an extensive lake, but now much contracted in its dimensions. Here are the remains of the palace of the bishops of Winchester, in which they resided until the parliamentary war, when Waller's army destroyed it. It was erected in 1135 by bishop Henry de Blois, brother of King Stephen, and was much embellished by William of Wykeham. Here is a free school for 36 boys, founded and endowed by Bishop Morley. The endowment now yields £38 per annum. Distance from Southampton, 10 m. E.N.E., and from London, 65 m. S.W. by W. Pop., in 1801, 1773; in 1831, 2181. A. P., £4,809.

WALTHAM-BRIGHT, a parish in the hundred of Faircross, co. of Berks. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Berks and dio. of Salisbury, rated at £11 15s., and, in 1829, in the patronage of Mrs Plumtree. Church ded. to All Saints. Two children of this parish are entitled to education in the school of Chaddleworth. Distance from East Haseley, 5 m. W. S.W. Pop., in 1801, 420; in 1831, 442. A. P., £3,035.

WALTHAM (COLD), a parish in the hundred of Bury, rape of Arundel, co. of Sussex. Living, a perpetual curacy, certified at £16, and in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the bishop of Chichester. Distance from Petworth, 5½ m. S.E. Pop., in 1801, 237; in 1831, 449. A. P., £744.

WALTHAM-CROSS, a ward in the parish of Chesant-St-Mary, in the hundred and co. of Hertford. Here is a chapel, the living of which is a donative curacy in the patronage of the lord of the site of Waltham-abbey, to which £100 per annum was given and settled thereon for ever, by Edward, earl of Norwich. The appointment of a curate is vested in the surviving trustees of the earl of Norwich. The Independents have a place of worship here. Courts leet and baron are held twice a year. Here are almshouses for four poor widows, which were rebuilt in 1830. The name is derived from the circumstance of a handsome cross having been erected here by Edward I., in memory of his consort Eleanor, whose corpse rested here when conveying from Lincolnshire, where she died, to London. A cross was erected at every stage where it rested, and Charing-cross in London was the last. This noble cross is of a hexangular form, highly enriched with tabernacle work and foliage, adorned with crowned statues of the queen, and pendant shields bearing the devices of England, Castile, Leon, and Ponthieu. In 1757, this monument was enclosed by a brick-wall, erected to preserve it from further mutilation, at the request of the society of antiquaries, by Lord Monson. This ward is separated from the parish of Waltham-abbey by the river Lea. Distance from Hertford, 9 m. S. by E. Pop. returned with that of the parish.

WALTHAM (GREAT), a parish in the hundred of Chelmsford, co. of Essex. The living is a vicarage in the archd. of Essex and dio. of London, rated at £18 13s. 4d., and in patronage of the president and fellows of Trinity college, Oxford. Church ded. to St Mary and St Lawrence. Courts leet and baron are held here once a year. The parish contains the chapelry of Black-chapel, and is crossed by the river Chelmer. Distance from Chelmsford, 4 m. N. by W. Pop., in 1801, 1475; in 1831, 2013. A. P., £10,739.

WALTHAM-ST-LAWRENCE, a parish in the hundred of Wargrave, co. of Berks. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Berks and co. of Salisbury, rated at £7 6s. 8d., and, in 1829, in patronage of Lord Braybrooke. There is a beautiful monument in the church to Sir Henry Neville, who died in 1593, and was one of the gentlemen of the privy chamber to Edward VI. There is a school here for poor children, supported by an endowment of £6 per annum, bequeathed by Michael Wondea-ford in 1712, and also by a smaller bequest of Richard How in 1652. There is also a national school which is supported by Lord Braybrooke. There is a fair held here on August 11th for horses and cattle. On Castle-Acre, an eminence situated between the church and the Bath road, was formerly a Roman station, and coins, urns, household utensils, &c., have been frequently found here. Lord Braybrooke, who is lord of the manor, possesses an ancient seat at Billingbear, within the parish. Distance from Maidenhead, 5½ m. S.W. Pop., in 1801, 572; in 1831, 739. A. P., £4,401.

WALTHAM (LITTLE), a parish in the hundred of Chelmsford, co. of Essex. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Essex and dio. of London, rated at £11 10s., and, in 1829, in patronage of T. L. Hodges, Esq. Church ded. to St Martin. The Independents have a place of worship here; and there is a school with an annual income of about £20, arising from annual subscription. It is situated on the road from Chelmsford to Bury, and on the banks of the river Chelmer. Distance from Chelmsford, 4 m. N. by E. Pop., in 1801, 532; in 1831, 674. A. P., £3,926.

WALTHAM (NORTH), a parish in the hundred of Overton, Kingsclere division of the co. of Southampton. Living, a rectory, rated at £15 13s. 4d., in patronage of the bishop of Winchester, and in the peculiar jurisdiction of the incumbent. Church ded. to St Michael. This parish is within the jurisdiction of the Cheyney courts of the bishop of Winchester. Distance from Basingstoke, 6 m. S.W. by W. Pop., in 1801, 338; in 1831, 458. A. P., £1,772.

WALTHAM (UP), a parish in the hundred of Box and Stockbridge, rape of Chichester, co. of Sussex. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Chichester, rated at £6 2s. 11d., returned at £125, and, in 1829, in patronage of the earl of Egremont. The east end of the church, which is in the early style of English architecture, is of a circular form. Distance from Petworth, 6½ m. S.S.W. Pop., in 1801, 65; in 1831, 95. A. P., £407.

WALTHAM (WHITE, or ABBAS), a parish in the hundred of Beynhurst, co. of Berks. Living, a vicarage, to which is annexed the rectory of Shottebrook, in the archd. of Berks and dio. of Salisbury, rated at £10 13s. 4d., and, in 1829, in patronage of Arthur Vansittart, Esq. Church ded. to St Mary. Lyson, in his Magna Britannia, says, "There is no assemblage of houses near the church: those belonging to the parish are chiefly situated at Waltham-street, Paley-street, Littlewick-green, and Littlefield-green." Thomas Hearne, the antiquary, was born here in 1678. Smewin's-house, which is now occupied as a farm-house, is surrounded by a moat, and is said to have been a hunting-seat of Prince Arthur, eldest son of Henry VII. In this house lived the celebrated Dodwell, first Camden professor of ancient history at Oxford. In the vicinity have been found many Roman coins, tiles, and other antiquities. Distance from Maldenhead, 4 m. S.W. Pop., in 1801, 553; in 1831, 902. A. P., £5,483.

WALTHAM-ON-THE-WOLDS, a parish, formerly a market-town, in the hundred of Framland, co. of Leicester. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Leicester and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £19 5s., and, in 1829, in patronage of the duke of Rutland. The church is ded. to St Mary Magdalene, and is a curious structure, in a mixed style of English architecture. It contains three decorated stalls, and an ancient Norman font. The market, which has fallen into disuse, was held on Thursday; and a fair is held on the 19th of September. Here is a small endowment for the education of poor children. Distance from Melton-Mowbray, 5 m. N.E. Pop., in 1801, 440; in 1831, 653. A. P., £3,757.

WALTHAMSTOW, a parish in the hundred of Beacontree, co. of Essex. This place is mentioned in the Norman survey under the name of Welamnestun, as having been in the possession of Judith, niece of William the Conqueror. It was afterwards given to the care of Warwick, but lapsed to the crown in 1396, on the attainder of Earl Thomas. The village stands in a pleasant situation on the borders of Epping-Forest, on the new road to Woodford, and consists of numerous detached houses, encompassed with trees and woodland. The parish is bounded by the river Lea, which is here navigable, and is crossed by a bridge. Here are extensive copper-mills, and an oil-mill. The lords of the manor hold courts leet and baron, and the government of the parish is intrusted to a select vestry of seventeen, besides the vicar and church-wardens.—Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of London, rated at £13 6s. 8d., and, in 1829, in patronage of the Rev. W. Wilson, D.D. Church ded. to St Mary. It is a neat structure, and contains several handsome monuments. There is a beautiful circular window of stained glass in the chancel, originally made for Southampton castle, and presented by Miss Russell. A monument in the churchyard, to the father of that lady, is from the chisel of Chantrey. A chapel-of-ease was erected by subscription, at an expense of £1,800, at Chapel-End, in this parish. The Independents and Unitarians have places of worship here. Here is a free school, which, together with an almshouse for 13 poor people, participates in an endowment of £42 17s. 4d., arising from a rent-charge. The almshouse is further endowed with £30

4s. 9d. per annum, bequeathed in 1815 by Mr Richard Banks; and with £500, 4 per cent annuities, given in 1825 by William Beauford, Esq. The national school has an endowment of £17 10s. per annum; 120 boys and 94 girls receive instruction here. Here is an infant school for 70 children, founded in 1828, and supported by subscription. The Independents have a school in which 30 girls receive instruction, 20 of which are clothed. In 1797, Mrs Mary Squires founded almshouses for six poor widows, and endowed them with an annual income of £78. In 1810, Mrs Mary Newell gave £900 to the Sunday school, and an annual sum of £10 for apprenticing a boy. "George Monnex, sometime lord mayor of London, about the year 1527, built here an hospital for 13 poor people, viz. 8 men and 5 women."—Tanner's Not. Mon. Distance from London, 6 m. N.E. by N. Pop., in 1801, 3006; in 1831, 4258. A. P., £34,507.

WALTON, a parish in the hundred of Newport, co. of Buckingham. WALTON, a parish in the hundred of Colneis, co. of Suffolk. Living, a discharged vicarage, to which is annexed that of Felixstow, in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich, rated at £4 6s. 8d., and, in 1829, in patronage of G. Thompson, Esq. Church ded. to St Mary. The Baptists have a place of worship here. The parish lies on the North sea, and is defended by a Martello tower. — "Roger Bigod the first, before the death of King William Rufus, gave the church of St Felix here to the monastery of Rochester, who quickly settled therein a cell of their own Benedictine monks, which continued till 10th September, 1528, when it was suppressed, and in December following, given to Cardinal Wolsey, toward the better endowment of his colleges; 23d Henry VIII. it was granted to Thomas, duke of Norfolk; 26th Henry VIII. to the priory of Thetford; and, 19th Elizabeth, to Thomas Sekford."—Tanner's Not. Mon. The following account of Walton castle is given by Mr Grose in his antiquities of England:—"This castle formerly stood on a high cliff in Felixstow, at the distance of one mile from the mouth of Woodbridge river, and two miles from Orwell-haven. Its remains in 1766 were only visible at near low water, the sea having gained so considerably on the coast as to wash away the cliff on which it stood. A gentleman living about that time, remembered the ruins of the castle to have stood at least 50 yards within the extremity of the cliff. Tradition reports this to have been one of the Roman fortresses, erected by Constantine the Great when he withdrew his legions from the frontier towns in the east of Britain, and built forts and castles to supply the want of them.

There can be no doubt but Walton castle was a Roman fortification, as appears from the great variety of Roman urns, rings, coins, &c. that have been found there. The coins that have lately been taken up here are of Vespasian and Antonine, Severus and his successors to Gordian III., and from Gallienus down to Arcadius and Honorius. It is certain the castle had the privilege of coining money, for several dies have been found for that purpose. Here, Hollinshed informs us, the earl of Leicester landed with his Flemings in 1173, and was received by Hugh Bigod, earl of Norfolk, then lord of the manor and castle of Walton; and in 1176," says the same author, "Henry the Second causes all such castles as had been kept against him during the time of that rebellion, and Walton among the rest, to be overthrown and made plain with the ground; and this was so effectually done, that to prevent its ever rising again, the stones of it were carried into all parts of Felixstow, Walton, and Trimley, and footpaths were paved with them on both sides of the roads; in many places they still remain entire, and some fragments are to be met with in all: at same time the castle of Ipswich was demolished." Distance from Ipswich, 10 m. S.E. by E. Pop., in 1801, 628; in 1831, 887. A. P., £2,957.

WALTON, a parish in almsley of the city and E. R. of the co. of York. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of York, certified at £7 13s. 4d., returned at £50, and in patronage of the Impropriators. The church—which is ded. to St Peter—"is situated in the highest part of the village, consisting of a nave and chancel, with an attached tower at the west end. The latter is in four stories, with a battlement and crocketed pinnacles at the angles. The south side of the nave is made into three divisions by buttresses; in the westernmost is a porch and pointed doorway. The south side of the chancel has a handsome pointed window with three lights, with trefoil heads and three quatrefolys conjoined in the sweep of the arch. The pointed window in the east end is still handsome, having five lights, with trefoil heads and ten quatrefolys in the sweep of the arch; all the tracery in the heads of these windows is filled up with plaster in the most disgraceful manner. On the north side of the chancel is a handsome monument, consisting of a recess with a crocketed pediment, inclosing seven leaves, and on each side is a buttress ending in a finial. Beneath this is the effigy of a knight in full armour, with a gorget, hood, and tippet of chain or mail armour; he has a grapon, and over it an enriched belt for the sword. From the style of the armour it appears to be the effigy of a person of distinction of the reign of Edward III. The font is octagonal, at the west end of the church. The town is small and built on the side of a hill. On the front of an ancient building, now a cottage, are the arms of the Fairfax family, quartered with five other families, and supported by a lion and a bear. Here also was a noble mansion, once the residence of the Fairfax family. It was taken down about 80 years ago, and a modern house built on its site."—Allen's History of Yorkshire. Here is a Sunday school. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here. The parish is crossed by the Roman Watling-street. Distance from Weatherby, $2\frac{1}{2}$ m. E. by S. Pop., in 1801, 205; in 1831, 237. A. P., £1,316.

WALTON, a township in the parish of Great Sandall, lower division of the wapentake of Agbrigg, W. R. of the co. of York. It is 3 m. S.E. by S. from Wakefield. Pop., in 1801, 315; in 1831, 376. A. P., £3,680.

WALTON-CARDIFFE, a parish in the lower division of the hundred of Tewkesbury, co. of Gloucester. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester, returned at £50, and in patronage of the warden and fellows of All Souls college, Oxford. Church ded. to St James. Distance from Tewkesbury, 1 m. S.E. by E. Pop., in 1801, 62.

WALTON-LE-DALE, a chapelry in the parish and hundred of Blackburn, co.-palatine of Lancaster. It is situated on an eminence, commanding beautiful views of the vale of the Ribble and the vale of the Darwent, bounded by the extensive ranges of Longridge, Pendle, and Billinghills. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Chester, rated at £15 18s. 8d., and in patronage of the vicar of Blackburn. Here are three large cotton manufactories and several calico-printing establishments, which give employment to many of the inhabitants. Here are Sunday and national schools, and a free school with an endowment of £16 per annum. A great battle was fought here on the 17th of August, 1648, between Cromwell and the duke of Hamilton. Distance from Preston, 2 m. S.E. Pop., in 1801, 3832; in 1831, 5767. A. P., £13,075.

WALTON (EAST), a parish in the Lynn division of the hundred of Freebridge, co. of Norfolk. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Norfolk, rated at £6 3s. 4d., returned at £50, and in the patronage of Andrew Hammond, Esq. Church ded. to St Mary. Distance from Swaffham, $7\frac{1}{2}$ m. N.W. Pop., in 1801, 151; in 1831, 220. A. P., £1,483.

WALTON (EAST), a parish in the hundred of Daugleddau, co. of Pembroke, South Wales. The parish contains 110 acres. Pop., in 1801, 209; in 1831, 220. A. P., £1,062.

WALTON-D'EIVILE, a parish in the Warwick division of the hundred of Kington, co. of Warwick. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Worcester, rated at £4 13s. 4d., and annexed to the vicarage of Wellesbourn-Hastings. Distance from Kington, $3\frac{1}{2}$ m. W.N.W. Pop. returned with that of Wellesbourn-Hastings.

WALTON-IN-GORDANO, a parish in the hundred of Portbury, co. of Somerset. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Bath and dio. of Bath and Wells, rated at £9 15s. 5d., returned at £89 10s., and, in 1829, in the patronage of J. P. Miles, Esq. Church ded. to St Paul. Here are remains of an ancient structure called Walton castle; it is an octagonal pile, with embattled walls and a turret at each angle. Distance from Bristol, $11\frac{1}{2}$ m. W. Pop., in 1801, 147; in 1831, 297.

WALTON-ON-THE-HILL, a parish in the hundred of West Derby, co.-palatine of Lancaster. It contains the chapelries of Everton, Formby, Kirkby, and West Derby, and the townships of Bootle with Linacre, Fazakerley, Kirkley, Simonswood, and Walton-on-the-Hill. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Chester, rated at £69 16s. 10d., and, in 1829, in the patronage of J. S. Leigh, Esq. There is also a vicarage, rated at £6 13s. 4d., returned at £94 5s. 2d., and in patronage of the rector. The church is ded. to St Mary, and, till 1698, was the parish church of Liverpool, the church of St Nicholas there being a chapel-of-ease to the vicarage of Walton. In consequence of its proximity to Liverpool, many merchants, retired tradesmen, &c. reside here. Here is the house of correction for the county. Distance from Liverpool, $2\frac{1}{2}$ m. N. by E. Pop. of the township of Walton-on-the-Hill, in 1801, 681; in 1831, 1400. A. P., £9,425. Pop. of the parish, in 1831, 22,575. A. P., £79,630.

WALTON-ON-THE-HILL, a parish in the lower division of the hundred of Cophora and Effingham, co. of Surrey. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Surrey and dio. of Winchester, rated at £12 6s. 5½d., and, in 1829, in patronage of Mrs Gea. The church is ded. to St Peter, and contains a curious ancient font. It was recently enlarged, 60 of the additional sittings being free. Distance from Epsom, $4\frac{1}{2}$ m. S. by E. Pop., in 1801, 204; in 1831, 352. A. P., £1,132.

WALTON (INFERIOR and SUPERIOR), townships in the parish of Runcorn, hundred of Bucklow, co.-palatine of Chester. The Mersey and Irwell canal passes in the neighbourhood. Distance from Warrington, 2 m. S. Pop. of the former, in 1801, 271; in 1831, 340. A. P., £1,116. Pop. of the latter, in 1801, 193; in 1831, 238. A. P., £852.

WALTON-MANDUIT, a hamlet in the parish of Wellesbourn-Hastings, co. of Warwick.

WALTON-LE-SOKEN, a parish in the hundred of Tendring, co. of Essex. Living, a discharged vicarage, rated at £9, in the jurisdiction of the peculiar court of the soken, subject to the visitation of the bishop of London, and consolidated with the vicarage of Kirby-le-Soken and Thorpe-le-Soken. The church—which is ded. to All Saints—was erected about 25 years ago, in room of an ancient structure which was swept away by the sea. Pyrites is abundant on the shore, and is collected for the purpose of being manufactured into sulphate of iron. This place is frequented by invalids for the benefit of sea-bathing, for whose accommodation lodging-houses have been erected with baths and other conveniences. Embedded in the clay, which constitutes the basis of the cliffs, are found many organic remains. The following account of this parish and church is quoted by Grose from Morant's Essex:—"Walton is the farthest of the three sokens, bounded on the east by the German ocean; part of it is a long slip of earth running from north to south, about 3 m. in length and one or less in breadth. The flowing in of the tide makes it a peninsula. The wall thrown up on this shore to keep out the sea is what gave name to this town or village. It extended considerably further east than it does now, but hath been devoured by the sea. Some have affirmed that ruins of buildings have been discovered under water at a considerable distance. About 5 m. off from this shore lies a shoal of rocks called West Rocks, which, on a great ebb, are left dry; a spot among them is called the tower. The raging sea keeps daily undermining and encroaching upon this parish, so that the hall will soon be upon an island. The Waide is a point of land on the east part of this parish, jutting into the sea, well-known to mariners. Near it the Trinity-house have erected a tower or lighthouse of brick, about 80 feet high from the foundation. There is only one manor in this parish. Walton-hall is the mansion-house. This manor belonged, as the two other sokens, to the dean and chapter of St Paul's, and have passed from them to Thomas Lord Darcy, Earl Rivers, and the Right Hon. the earl of Rockford. A farm in this parish was purchased in 1739 by the governors of Queen Anne's bounty, for the augmentation of the rectory of the Holy Trinity in Colchester. It consists of 89 acres 50 perches, but is too near the sea, which often undermines some part of it. Here was formerly the endowment or corps of one of the prebends of St Paul's, London, but the sea hath consumed or devoured it long ago: it is therefore styled Prebenda consumpta per mare. It has the thirteenth stall on the left side of the choir, and is rated at one mark." It is 13½ m. S.E. by S. from Manningtree. Pop., in 1801, 221; in 1831, 469. A. P., £2,389.

WALTON-ON-THAMES, a parish in the first division of the hundred of Elmbridge, co. of Surrey. It contains the divisions of Common-Side, Horsham, Burnwood, and Town. The name is probably derived from some Roman works on St George's hill, the remains of which are yet visible. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Surrey and dio. of Winchester, rated at £12 13s. 4d., and in patronage of the lord-chancellor. Church ded. to St Mary. It is an ancient and handsome structure, containing, among other fine monuments, one to the memory of Richard Boyle, Viscount Shannon, who distinguished himself at the battle of the Boyne, executed by Roubilliac. The Independents have a place of worship here. Here is a brick and stone-bridge over the Thames and the adjoining meadows, recently erected in the room of a curious wooden-bridge, built in 1750 by Samuel Dicken, Esq. Iron-ore is found here. A fair for cattle is held on Wednesday and Thursday in Easter-week, having been granted by Henry VIII. Here are some almshouses, founded and endowed by one Smith, who, having been originally a beggar and amassed a considerable sum, left a portion of it to the poor of every parish in the county of Surrey, with the exception of those in which he had been punished as a vagrant. A national school, which is supported by subscription, was established by the late earl of Carhampton. Among the many noble mansions and elegant villas which adorn the parish, may be mentioned Appscourt, on the site of which was formerly a mansion belonging to Cardinal Wolsey, of the same name. The proprietor has a right to nominate four poor widows to a charity in the parish of Eddingham. A custom of this place is, that the owner of Appscourt distribute, on the 13th of November annually, one barrel of small beer and a quarter of wheat made into bread, amongst such travellers as may claim it on that day. Pame's-hill is the site of the residence and grounds of the dowager countess of Carhampton: at the foot of this hill flows the small river Mole, which is here crossed by a brick bridge. Oliver Cromwell sometimes resided at Ashley-house, which was built by Cardinal Wolsey. Oatlands, formerly belonging to the late duke of York, is in this parish. Bradshaw, the regicide, is said to have lived in a house now used as a farm-house, in which there is some fine old carving. Till the manufacture of blocks was carried to Portsmouth, by the erection of the ingenious machinery now used there, it gave support to a number of people in this parish. On St George's hill, formerly mentioned, are the remains of a Roman camp, still called the camp of Caesar. Here it was that that general gave battle to the natives under Cassivelaunus the British king. The latter, by means of stakes driven into the river Thames, prevented the reiterated attempts of the Romans to ford, and finally drove them back at a place still called Coway-Stakes. Distance from Weybridge, 2 m. N.E. by E., and 18 m. S.W. by W. from London. Pop., in 1801, 1476; in 1831, 2035. A. P., £11,522.

WALTON-ON-TRENT, a parish in the hundred of Repton and Gresley, co. of Derby. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Derby and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, rated at £17 2s. 8½d., and, in 1829, in patronage of the marquess of Townshend. The church—which is ded. to St John the Baptist—was recently repaired, and contains several old monuments. Here is a school endowed with £28 annual income, besides subscriptions, for the use of the poor children of the parish; it is conducted on the national plan, and derives its fixed income from the benefaction of two ladies called Levett and Bailey, in 1760. Distance from Burton-upon-Trent, 4 m. S.W. Pop., in 1801, 343; in 1831, 408. A. P., £6,454.

WALTON (WEST), a parish in the Marshland division of the hundred of Freebridge, co. of Norfolk. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Norwich, rated at £16 13s. 4d., and, in 1829, in patronage of H. H. Townsend, Esq. The living of West Walton Ellen is a rectory, rated at £16, and in the patronage of the lord-chancellor. Church ded. to St Mary. Distance from Wisbeach, 3 m. N.E. by E. Pop., in 1801, 513; in 1831, 905. A. P., £8,369.

WALTON (Wear), a parish in the hundred of Rhôs, co. of Pembroke, South Wales. Living, a discharged rectory in the dio. of St David's, rated at £6 13s. 4d., returned at £141 15s. 6d., and, in 1829, in patronage of — Butler, Esq. It is situated on St Bride's bay, and contains about 1250 acres of land. Distance from Haverford West, 5½ m. S.W. Pop., in 1801, 306; in 1831, 411. A. P., £748.

WALTON-ON-THE-WOLDS, a parish in the eastern division of the hundred of Goscoat, co. of Leicester. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Leicester and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £15, and, in 1829, in patronage of the Rev. W. T. Roe. Church ded. to St Bartholomew. The parish is situated on the river Soar. Distance from Loughborough, 4 m. E. Pop., in 1801, 249; in 1831, 289. A. P., £1,971.

WALTON-WOOD, a parish in the hundred of Norman-cro-s, co. of Huntingdon. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Huntingdon and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £11, and, in 1829, in patronage of Sir R. H. Bickerton, Bart. Church ded. to St Andrew. Distance from Huntingdon, 6 m. N. by W. Pop., in 1801, 198; in 1831, 305. A. P., £3,358.

WALWICK-CHESTER, an extra-parochial liberty, locally situated within the parish of Warden, north-western division of Tindale ward, co. of Northumberland. This place was formerly the Roman station of the Ala secunda Asturum, and was called Cithernum. Here have been found many curious antiquities, particularly a curious tablet commemorating the renewal of some edifice by the above-mentioned wing of the Astures; also a mutilated statue of Europa, cut in freestone, and a vault of some size. The site of the station may still be traced, measuring from north to south 400 feet, and from east to west 570. Here was formerly an ancient tower, out of the ruins of which was built Walwick Grange, some time occupied by the Errington family as their residence, but now used as a farmhouse. There are fragments of an ancient cross in Homer's lane. Distance from Hexham, 4 m. N. by W. Pop. returned with that of the parish.

WALWORTH, a township in the parish of Heighington, south-eastern division of Darlington ward, co-palatine of Durham. Distance from Darlington, 4 m. N.W. Pop., in 1801, 137; in 1831, 155. A. P., £3,104.

WALWORTH, a chapelry and hamlet in the parish of Newington-Butts, co. of Surrey. Living, a perpetual curacy, a peculiar of the archbishop of Canterbury, not in charge, in the dio. of Canterbury, and in the patronage of the rector of Newington. The church, which is ded. to St Peter, has been already described under the article Newington. Distance from St Paul's cathedral, London, 2½ m. S. Pop. returned with that of the parish.

WALWYN'S-CASTLE, a parish in the hundred of Rhôs, co. of Pembroke, South Wales. Living, a rectory in the dio. of St David's, rated at £7 13s. 4d., and in the patronage of the lord-chancellor. Tradition says that the cousin of the British King Arthur, called Gwalchmai, who was a man of gigantic stature, is interred here, having suffered shipwreck on this coast, after having been driven from his inheritance of Galway in Ireland. As may be supposed from the name, an ancient castle formerly existed here, the ruins of which are still visible. It contains, in area, 2473 acres. Distance from Haverford West, 6 m. S.W. Pop., in 1801, 278; in 1831, 311. A. P., £1,520.

WAMBROOK, a parish in the hundred of Beaminster-Forum and Redheue, Bridport division of the co. of Dorset. Living, a rectory, a peculiar of the prebendary of Chardstock, in the cathedral church of Salisbury, rated at £8 7s. 1d., and, in 1829, in patronage of Mrs Edwards. The church, which was formerly a chapel to the vicarage of Chardstock, is ded. to St Mary. Distance from Chard, 2 m. S.W. Pop., in 1801, 138; in 1831, 247. A. P., £1,468.

WAMPOOL, or WALHINPOOL, a township in the parish of Aikton ward, and co. of Cumberland. Distance from Wigton, 5 m. N. by W. Pop., in 1801, 119; in 1831, 127.

WANBOROUGH, an extra-parochial liberty in the first division of the hundred of Woking, co. of Surrey. Here is a chapel ded. to St Bartholomew. Distance from Guildford, 4 m. W. Pop., in 1801, 101; in 1831, 111. A. P., £1,351.

WANBOROUGH, a parish in the hundred of Kingsbridge, co. of Wilts. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Wilts and dio. of Salisbury, rated at £31 10s. 7½d., and in patronage of the dean and chapter of Winchester. Church ded. to St Andrew. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here. Distance from Swindon, 3½ m. E. by S. Pop., in 1801, 793; in 1831, 1016. A. P., £7,093.

WANDISLEY, a hamlet in the parish of Aunisbury, co. of Nottingham.

WANDSWORTH, a parish in the western division of the hundred of Brixton, co. of Surrey. It derives its name from the river Wandle, which here falls into the Thames. It occupies the declivities of two hills, and consists chiefly of a single street, containing some handsome houses. The town is within the jurisdiction of the new police of the city of London. The magistrates of the county hold the petty sessions for the hundred of Brixton here every Saturday, and a court of requests for the recovery of debts under £5 is held here, comprising within its jurisdiction the parishes of Barnes, Battersea, Lower Tooting, Merton, Putney, Wandsworth, and Wembleton. A fair for cattle, horses, and pigs, is held here on Whit-Monday. A rail-road extends from this place to Mersham in Surrey, passing through Croydon and Mitcham. Here are a large brewery, distilleries, and vinegar works; also mills for the preparation of iron, white-lead, and linseed oil; three corn mills, dye-works, hat manufactories, and establishments for calico-printing, calendering, and the making of bolting cloths. The living is a vicarage in the archd. of Surrey and dio. of Winchester, rated at £15 5s. 5d., and, in 1829, in the patronage of the Rev. W. Borradaile. The church is a plain brick structure ded. to All Saints, containing several monuments. His majesty's commissioners for building new churches have recently erected a church, ded. to St Anne, at an expense of £14,600, containing 1758 sittings, of which 1332 are free. The Baptists, Independents, Society of Friends, and Wesleyan Methodists, have places of worship here. Here are two schools belonging to the Society of Friends. Here is a free school, founded and endowed in 1710 by Wm. Wicks: 35 boys are educated on the original foundation, but the school has of late been incorporated with the national school, in which 125 boys and 100 girls are educated; 25 of the boys and 30 of the girls being also clothed. Here is a school for children of every religious denomination, founded in 1821, in which 170 boys and 60 girls are educated. Forty girls are instructed in knitting, spinning, &c., in a school of industry, founded in 1805 and supported by subscription. Here is a fund arising from bequests by Nicholas Tounett, Sir Alan Broderick, and Sir Francis Millington, from which 15 watermen of the parish receive £4 per annum each. Here is a parochial library, and some small funds are applied to the relief of the poor, and the apprenticing of poor children. Among the charities may be noticed that of the benevolent Alderman Smith, commonly called Dog Smith, who was born and buried here. In 1572, here was established the first presbyterian congregation in the kingdom. Distance from London, 6 m. S.W. Pop., in 1801, 4445; in 1831, 6879. A. P., £25,544.

WANGFORD, a hundred in the co. of Suffolk, situated near the north-eastern point of the county, containing 29 parishes, and, in 1831, 13,605 inhabitants.

WANGFORD, a parish in the hundred of Blything, co. of Suffolk. It contains the hamlet of Wangford. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich, not in charge, returned at £45. Church ded. to St Peter, and the living, in 1829, was in the patronage of the earl of Stradbroke. "Here was a priory of Cluniac monks, cell to Thetford, before the year 1160, said to have been founded by Doudo Asini, steward to the king's household. It was often seized during the wars with France as alien, but was made denizen 17th Richard II. It was ded. to St Mary as some, and as others to St Peter and St Paul; had yearly revenues at the suppression, reckoned at £30 9s. 5d., and was, together with the monastery of Thetford, granted, 32d Henry VIII., to Thomas, duke of Norfolk. Here were only a prior and two monks."—Tanner's Not. Mon. Distance from Southwold, 3½ m. N. by W. Pop. of the hamlet, in 1801, 116; in 1831, 156. A. P.,

WANGFORD, a parish in the hundred of Lackford, co. of Suffolk. Living, a discharged rectory, to which is annexed the rectory of Brandonferry, in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich, rated at £9 11s. 8½. Here is a school for poor children of this parish, as well as those of Brandon, Downham, and Weeting, with a house for the master, founded in 1644 by Robert Wright and Johanna his widow, and endowed with a bequest of a rent-charge of £40 per annum. Distance from Brandonferry, 4 m. S.W. by W. Pop., in 1801, 43; in 1831, 53. A. P., £950.

WANLASS, a hamlet in the parish of West Wilton, co. of York.

WANLIP, originally Onelep, a parish in the western division of the hundred of Gos-cote, co. of Leicester. It is situated on the river Soar, which is here crossed by a bridge. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Leicester and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £14 4s. 4½d., and, in 1829, in patronage of Sir C. H. Palmer, Bart. Church ded. to St Nicholas. This parish is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under 40s. The old Fosse road passes in the vicinity, and many Roman antiquities have been found. Distance from Mount-Sorrel, 3½ m. S.E. by S. Pop., in 1801, 103; in 1831, 91. A. P., £2,023.

WANNERTON, a hamlet in the parish of Kidderminster, co. of Worcester.

WANSFORD, or WALNESFORD, a parish in the liberty of Peterborough, co. of Northampton. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough, and subordinate to the rectory of Thornhaugh. Church ded. to St Mary. Distance from London, 88 m. N. by W. Pop., in 1801, 148; in 1831, 179. A. P., £792.

WANSFORD, a township in the parish of Nafferton, wapentake of Dickerling, E. R. of the co. of York. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here. The parish is situated on the navigable river Hull. Here are manufactories of cotton-goods and carpets. Distance from Great Driffield, 3½ m. E.S.E. Pop., in 1801, 152; in 1831, 378. A. P., £2,055.

WANSTEAD, a parish in the hundred of Beacontree, co. of Essex. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Essex and dio. of London, rated at £6 13s. 9d., and in patronage of the Hon. W. T. P. L. Wellesley. Church ded. to St Mary. It is a handsome Grecian structure, consisting of a nave, aisles, and chancel, the window of the latter consisting of beautifully stained glass, representing Christ bearing the cross, from the altar-piece in the chapel of Magdalene college, Oxford. It contains a superb marble monument to the memory of Sir Josiah Child, Bart., who died in 1699. Here is a free school in which 60 children are educated, 40 of whom are clothed. Here is a splendid mansion called Wanstead house, erected in 1715 by Sir Richard Child, afterwards earl of Tybury. It was surrounded by beautiful grounds; but having come into the possession of the Hon. Mr Wellesley, it was sold and demolished in 1822. The stables and out-offices alone remain. About 1735, a number of antiquities were exhumed on the south side of the park. Distance from London, 7 m. N.E. Pop., in 1801, 918; in 1831, 1403. A. P., £9,045.

WANSTROW, a parish in the hundred of Frome, co. of Somerset. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Wells and dio. of Bath and Wells, rated at £13 9s. 9½d., and, in 1829, in patronage of the Rev. G. M. Bethune. Church ded. to St Mary. The parish contains the hamlet of Weston. Distance from Bruton, 5 m. N. by E. Pop., in 1801, 325; in 1831, 410. A. P., £1,934.

WANTAGE, a hundred in the co. of Berks, containing ten parishes, with the town of the same name, and, in 1831, 7561 inhabitants.

WANTAGE, a parish in the hundred of Wantage, co. of Berks. It comprises the market-town of Wantage, and the hamlets of Charleton, Grove, and West Lockinge. It is situated at the edge of the vale of the White Horse, and consists of several irregular streets. Alfred the Great was born here in 849, and his memory is here retained by a well called Alfred's well. An act of parliament has been recently obtained for paving and lighting the streets. The town is within the jurisdiction of the magistrates for the county, who hold petty sessions for the division here every Saturday. The lord of the manor holds an annual court. Saturday is market-day, chiefly for corn, also for pigs and cattle. Fairs for cattle, cheese, &c., are held on the first Saturdays of every month, on July 18th and October 18th., the last being a statute fair. Here is a branch of the Wilts and Berks canal affording a communication with Bath, Bristol, and London. The exports consist chiefly of corn, flour, and malt; and the imports of coal. Here are manufactories of sacking and twine. Living, a vicarage in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the dean and canons of Windsor, and rated at £35 2s. 8½d. Church ded. to St Peter and St Paul. It is a spacious cruciform structure, with a square tower at the intersection; it contains several monuments to members of the Fitz-Warrenne family, who are said to have been the founders. The Baptists, Independents, and Wesleyan Methodists, have places of worship here. Here is a free grammar school founded in the reigns of Henry VI. and Henry VII., and endowed with £200 per annum. Here are various Sunday schools. In 1680, Richard Styles founded and endowed 7 almshouses for 12 poor persons. The endowment arises from lands in the county of Southampton, producing £70 per annum. This town was a royal residence in the time of the West Saxons, and as such, was made a borough after the conquest. Distance from London, 60 m. W. Pop. of the town in 1801, 2339;

in 1831, 2507. A. P., £7,701. The remaining pop. is returned with the hamlets.

WANTESDEN, a parish in the hundred of Plomesgate, co. of Suffolk. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich, rated at £10, and returned at £34, and, in 1829, in patronage of N. Barnardiston, Esq. Church ded. to St John the Baptist. Distance from Orford, 4½ m. N.W. by W. Pop., in 1801, 79; in 1831, 125. A. P., £958.

WAPENBURY, a parish in the South-east division of the hundred of Knightlow, co. of Warwick. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Coventry and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, rated at £8, returned at £70 4s., and, in 1829, in patronage of Lord Clifford. The church is ded. to St John the Baptist. Distance from Southam, 6½ m. N.N.W. Pop., in 1801, including the township of Eathorpe, 282; in 1831, 252. A. P., £2,120.

WAPLEY, or WAPLEY, a parish in the lower division of the hundred of Grumbald's-Ash, co. of Gloucester. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester, rated at £7 18s., and in patronage of the dean and chapter of the cathedral of Bristol. The church is ded. to St Peter. Distance from Chipping-Sodbury, 2 m. S.W. by W. Pop., including the tything of Codrington, in 1801, 258; in 1831, 253. A. P., £4,828.

WAPLEY, a hamlet in the parish of Lofthouse, N.R. of the co. of York. Distance from Guisborough, 7½ m. E.

WAPLINGTON, a township in the parish of Allerthorpe, E. R. of the co. of York. Distance from Pocklington, 3 m. S.W. Pop., in 1801, 111; in 1831, 18. A. P., £740.

WAPPENHAM, a parish in the hundred of King's Sutton, co. of Northampton. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough, rated at £29 9s. 9½d., and in patronage of the bishop of Lincoln. Church ded. to St Mary. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here. Here was formerly the residence of the earl of Ferrars at Astwell. Distance from Towcester, 5 m. W.S.W. Pop., in 1831, 453. A. P., £2,189.

WAPPING, a parish in the Tower division of the hundred of Ossulstone, co. of Middlesex. This was originally a low district, overflowed by the waters of the Thames, and was not properly recovered till the reign of Queen Elizabeth, when it was drained and enclosed with walls. It is now an extensive portion of the metropolis, though in the reign of Charles II. it consisted only of a single street, extending from the Tower along the northern bank of the Thames. It is within the liberty of the Tower, and consists of many irregular streets, which are well paved and lighted. It was made a parish by act of parliament in the reign of William and Mary, and is within the jurisdiction of the court of requests for the Tower hamlets, for the recovery of debts under 40s. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Middlesex and dio. of London, not in charge, and in patronage of the principal and fellows of Brasenose college, Oxford. Church ded. to St John the Baptist. Here is a place of worship for Roman Catholics, and there is a school for children of that persuasion, in which about 400 receive education. Here is a free school in which 70 boys and 50 girls are educated. It was founded in 1704, and in 1822, received a bequest of £5000 from Samuel Troutbeck, Esq. of Madras. Here are extensive docks and warehouses, for an account of which see article LONDON. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in various manufactures connected with shipping. A destructive fire occurred here towards the end of last century, when upwards of 60 houses were burned, and several lives lost from the explosion of a large collection of gunpowder. It is 2 m. E.S.E. from St Paul's cathedral, and is included within the bills of mortality. Pop., in 1801, 5889; in 1831, 3564. A. P., £23,495.

WARBLETON, a parish in the hundred of Hawkesborough, rape of Hastings, co. of Sussex. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Lewes and dio. of Chichester, rated at £13 6s. 8d., and in patronage of the trustees of Smith's charities. Church ded. to St Mary. Distance from Hailsham, 6½ m. N. by E. Pop., in 1801, 908; in 1831, 1225. A. P., £3,237.

WARBLINGTON, a parish in the hundred of Bosmere, Portdown division of the co. of Southampton. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Winchester, rated at £19 9s. 4½d., and, in 1829, in patronage of the Rev. W. Norris. The church is an ancient structure, consisting of a nave, chancel, and side aisles, and presenting a combination of the Norman and early English architecture. At the end of each aisle is a small oratory. The parish contains the tything of Emsworth, and is bounded on the south by Langstone harbour. The following description of Warblington castle is extracted from Grose's antiquities of England:—"Warblington castle is situated about half a mile to the eastward of Havant. It appears to have been built with brick, faced on the outside with hewn stone. Its form was nearly square, surmounted with a deep fosse. The stone with which it was faced must have been brought hither by sea; for this country, for a great distance, affords none of the kind. Whether this ruin is a fragment of the ancient mansion of the family of the de Warblingtons, who resided here in the reigns of Edward I., II., and III., or the remains of a seat which afterwards belonged to the earls of Salisbury, is not certain, although most probably the latter, both from the style of the building and part of the materials, which are bricks seemingly much of the same form and proportions as those now made. In the reign of Queen Elizabeth this seat belonged to the family of the Cottons." Distance from Havant, 1 m. S.E. by E. Pop., in 1801, 1433; in 1831, 2118. A. P., £4,990.

WARBOROUGH, a parish in the hundred of Ewelme, co. of Oxford. Living, a perpetual curacy not in charge, in patronage of the president and fellows of Corpus Christi college, Oxford, and in the jurisdiction of the peculiar court at Dorchester. Church ded. to St Lawrence. Pop., in 1801, 555; in 1831, 681. A. P., £2,744.

WARBOURNE, a tything in the parish of Boldre, east division of the co. of Southampton.

WARBOYS, a parish in the hundred of Hurstingstone, co. of Huntingdon. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Huntingdon and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £37 10s., and, in 1829, in the patronage of William Strode, Esq. The church is ded. to St Mary Magdalene, and has lately been enlarged to the extent of 254 sittings, of which 158 are free. The Baptists have a place of worship here. Distance from Ramsey, 4½ m. S.S.E. Pop., in 1801, 943; in 1831, 1550. A. P., £10,834.

WARBRECK, a township in the parish of Bispham, hundred of Amounderness, co.-palatine of Lancaster. Distance from Poulton, 2½ m. W.S.W. Pop. returned with that of Layton.

WARBSTOW, a parish in the hundred of Leenewth, co. of Cornwall. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Cornwall and dio. of Exeter, and subordinate to the vicarage of Treneglos. The church contains a curious Norman font. Here are traces of an ancient fortification. Distance from Camelford, 8½ m. N.E. Pop., in 1801, 330; in 1831, 481. A. P., £1,727.

WARBURTON, a parish in the hundred of Bucklow, co.-palatine of Chester. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Chester, not in charge, annexed to the second mediety of Lymm, and in the patronage of R. E. E. Warburton, Esq. Church ded. to St Werburgh. In Leicester's history of the antiquities of Chester, it is said, "Here is an ancient free chapel at Warburton, now usually taken for a parish church, whereof Warburton of Arley, lord of the town, is patron. This parish comprehendeth only the township of Warburton. The words of the institution of the present parson are, Ad liberam capellam de Warburton et medietatem rectorie ecclesie de Lymme; so that Warburton hath the gift of half of Lymm as well as of Warburton wholly; and he is here presented to both, and ought to supply Warburton every Sunday, and Lymm every other Sunday by course." The parish is crossed by the rivers Mersey and Botling. A monastery of Premonstratensian canons, ded. to St Werburgh, formerly existed here. Distance from Warrington, 6½ m. E. by N. Pop., in 1801, 466; in 1831, 510. A. P., £3,103.

WARCOP, a parish in the ward of East, co. of Westmoreland. It comprehends the hamlets of Bleatarm, Burton, Sandford, and Warcop. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Carlisle, rated at £9 5s. 1½d., and, in 1829, in patronage of W. S. Preston, Esq. Church ded. to St Columba. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here. In the village is an ancient cross, which was recently brought from the common. An annual court is held at midsummer by the lord of the manor. The parish is crossed by the river Eden. Lead is said to exist in the neighbouring mountains, but is not wrought. It is supposed that an ancient castle and chapel existed here, as two places are known by the names of Castle-hill and Kirksteads; but no traces of them are in existence. Distance from Brough, 3 m. W. by N. Pop., in 1801, 707; in 1831, 680. A. P., £5,317.

WARDEN, a parish in the liberty of the isle of Sheppey, co. of Kent. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury, rated at £4 17s. 8½d., returned at £110, and, in 1829, in the patronage of Miss Simpson. Distance from Queenborough, 6½ m. E. Pop., in 1801, 7; in 1831, 27. A. P., £262.

WARDEN, a parish in the north-western division of the ward of Tindale, co. of Northumberland. It includes the chapelry of Heydon, the extra-parochial liberty of Warwick, and the townships of Broken-baugh, Deanraw, Lipwood, and Warden. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Northumberland and dio. of Durham, rated at £8 16s. 3d., and, in 1829, in the patronage of Colonel and Mrs Beaumont. Church ded. to St Michael. It is a cruciform structure of considerable antiquity, in the early English style of architecture. The parish lies between the wall of Severus and the north and south Tyne rivers. Here are vestiges of an ancient British fortification of a circular form, surrounded by a fosse and earth-works, which are supposed to have been added by the Romans, by whom it was occupied for some time. Near the vicarage house are remains of a similar fort, which, like the former, is now called Castlehill. Distance from Hexham, 2½ m. W. by N. Pop. of the township of Warden, in 1801, 349; in 1831, 540. A. P., £5,424. Pop. of the remainder of the parish in 1801, 1084; in 1831, 1640. A. P., £15,325.

WARDEN-CHIPPING. See CHIPPING-WARDEN.

WARDEN (OLD), a parish in the hundred of Wixamtree, co. of Bedford. Living, a discharged vicarage annexed to that of Southill, in the archd. of Bedford and dio. of Lincoln, certified at £25 1s. 4d., and, in 1829, in patronage of W. S. King, Esq. Church ded. to St Leonard. Here were formerly held a market and fair, but both have, long since, fallen into disuse. "Anno domini 1135, Walter Espee founded here an abbey for Cistercian monks, from Rivaux, and dedicated it to the blessed Virgin Mary. Its annual revenues at the suppression were worth £442 11s. 11d. It was surrendered by the abbot and 14 monks, December 4th, 1538."—Tanner's Not. Mon. Pop., in 1801, 455; in 1831, 660. A. P., £4,943.

WARDEN (WGR), a hamlet in the hundred of Chipping-Warden, co. of Northampton. In Bridge's Northampton it is said, "this house, which is now in possession of the earl of Halifax, was formerly a grange to the convent of Warden in Bedfordshire. The lands belonging to it lie in several parishes; in Aston, Byfield, Chipping-Warden, and Woodford. Upon the dissolution of the monasteries these are called a manor, and were granted to Sir John Dudley; and from him they passed with other possessions to the family of Butler."

WARDEN-LAW, a township in the parish of Houghton-le-Spring, northern division of the ward of Easington, co.-palatine of Durham. Here is a lofty eminence crossed by a railway, and having a steam-engine at the summit for the purpose of drawing up and letting down the waggons belonging to the Helton-colliery. Pop., in 1801, 15; in 1831, 54. A. P., £310.

WARD-END, a hamlet in the parish of Aston, co. of Warwick.

WARDHURST, or WARDE, a hamlet in the parish of Ivinghoe, co. of Buckingham.

WARDINGTON, or WARDINGTON, a chapelry in the parish of Cropredy, hundred of Banbury, co. of Oxford. Living, a curacy subordinate to and patronage with the vicarage of Cropredy, in the archd. and dio. of Oxford, not in charge. Church ded. to St Mary Magdalene. It is within the jurisdiction of the peculiar court of Banbury, in the cathedral church of Lincoln. Distance from Banbury, 4½ m. N.E. by N. Pop., in 1801, 554; in 1831, 824. A. P., £1,843.

WARDLE, or WARDHALL, a township in the parish of Banbury, hundred of Eddisbury, co.-palatine of Chester. The Chester canal passes here. Distance from Nantwich, 5 m. N.W. Pop., in 1801, 115; in 1831, 144. A. P., £1,025.

WARDLE, a joint township with Wuerdale in the parish of Rochdale, co.-palatine of Lancaster. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here. Distance from Rochdale, 3 m. N.N.E. Pop. returned with Wuerdale.

WARDLEWORTH, a township in the parish of Rochdale, hundred of Salford, co.-palatine of Lancaster. It includes the greater part of the town of Rochdale. Distance from Rochdale, 1½ m. N. by E. Pop., in 1801, 3296; in 1831, 9360. A. P., £9,651.

WARDLEY, a parish in the soke of Oakham, co. of Rutland. Living, a discharged rectory along with the vicarage of Belton, in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough, rated at £10 16s., and in patronage of the lord-chancellor. Church ded. to St Mary. The parish is pleasantly situated in a valley separated by the river Eye from Leicestershire. Distance from Uppingham, 3 m. W. S.W. Pop., in 1801, 52; in 1831, 50. A. P., £1,179.

WARDLOW, a township in the parish of Hopewell, but principally in that of Bakewell, hundred of High-Peak, co. of Derby. This township is within the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Chapel-en-le-Frith every third Tuesday, for the recovery of debts under £5. Here were lately discovered sundry sepulchral remains, supposed by some to have been those of persons killed during the exterminating wars of the rival Roses; but others think that the tomb wherein they were found was merely a family burying place. The bodies, 17 in number, were contained in rudely cut stone-coffins. Distance from Tideswell, 2 m. E. by S. Pop., in 1801, 132; in 1831, 149. A. P., £370.

WARDON, or WARDEN'S-LAW, a township in the parish of Houghton-le-Spring, northern division of Easington ward, co.-palatine of Durham. Distance from Durham, 8½ m. N.E. Pop., in 1801, 15; in 1831, 54. A. P., £310.

WARDREW, a hamlet in the parish of Haltwhistle, co. of Northumberland. Here is a celebrated Spa. Distance from Hexham, 20 m. W. by N.

WARE, a parish and market-town in the hundred of Braughin, co. of Hertford. This place, which was formerly called Gware, is said to have derived its name from the circumstance of a wear or dace having been formed across the river Lea by the Danes in 894, for the purpose of protecting their vessels. This manœuvre, however, was counteracted by King Alfred, who, having withdrawn the water from the bed of the river, thereby gained possession of the fort, which he demolished. A town was afterwards founded by Alfred's son, Edward; it, however, remained in obscurity till the reign of King John, when Sayer de Quincy opened the thoroughfare over the Lea at this point, which had formerly been kept shut by the imposition of a heavy toll; this materially increased the importance of the town as a place of trade, it being well adapted for such, having easy communication with London and Hertford by means of the river Lea. Gilbert, earl of Pembroke, was slain here at a tournament given by him in the reign of Hen. III. "Hugo de Grantemaisnil, who was lord of this town, and had other great possessions in these parts, gave, before A. D. 1081, to the monks of St Ebrulf at Utica in Normandy, the church of St Mary here, with the tithing thereunto belonging, and two carucates of land; whereupon it became a cell to that abbey, and, in process of time, was so well endowed, that, upon the seizure of the alien priories by King Edward III. during the wars with France, this was farmed at £200 per annum. After the suppression of these foreign houses, this was given, 3d Henry V., to the monks of Shene. King Henry VI. for some time annexed it to the abbey of St Mary near Leicester, but it was afterwards restored to Shene, and, as parcel of its possessions, granted by King Henry VIII. to Trinity college in Cambridge. In the north part of this town was an house of Grey or Franciscan friars, which, 36th Henry VIII., was granted to Thomas Birch."—Tanner's Not. Mon. The town consists of several streets, well lighted and paved, one of which extends about a mile along the London and Cambridge road. It is situated on the river Lea, which, as already mentioned, is here navigable. The principal trade of the town consists in malt, which is here manufactured to a great extent in about seventy establishments, and sent off for the supply of the London breweries. The imports consist principally of coal and manure. Tuesday is market day, and fairs for cattle are held on the last Tuesday in April, and on the Tuesday before September 21st. The market-house was finished in 1827, and contains excellent assembly-rooms. It was erected by subscription; the ground being furnished by the lord of the manor. A public library has existed here since 1796. The town is governed by four constables and two head-boroughs. A court baron is held here once a year, and the magistrates of the county hold petty sessions every second Tuesday. The living is a vicarage with that of Thuxbridge, in the archd. of Middlesex and dio. of London, rated at £20 10s., and in patronage of the master and fellows of Trinity college, Cambridge. Church ded. to St Mary. It consists of a cruciform edifice with nave, chancel, and side aisles, an embattled tower at the west end, and two sepulchral chapels. Within the church is an ancient font, wrought in the later style of English architecture. The governors of Christ's hospital formerly erected a gallery at the west end of the church, which was employed as a schoolroom for the use of the junior scholars. This branch has, however, been long removed to Hertford. The national school, which is supported by subscription, affords education to about 100 boys. Here is also a free school for 100 girls, chiefly supported by the benevolent exertions of two ladies. The Independents maintain a British school here, at which 80 boys are instructed. Here are several institutions for the use of the poor; amongst others, a lying-in-society and a friendly institution; besides these, there have been left at different times bequests to the amount of about £300 annually, which is annually distributed. Here are also 17 almshouses for poor and aged, some of which are endowed to a small extent. The Independents and Wesleyan Methodists have each two places of worship here, and the Society of Friends has one. The new river company of the metropolis draws its supply of water from two springs of excellent water in the neighbourhood, one of which is called Amwell spring, the other Chadwell spring, which latter is, however, commonly known by the name of the New River Head. Here is a curious piece of antiquity called the great bed of Ware, the use and origin of which is involved in obscurity: it is dated 1453 at the head. Here were formerly found four coffins of stone at a place said to have been formerly the burial place of the priory, and now called Bury-Field. Distance from London, 21 m. N. Pop., in 1801, 2950; in 1831, 4214. A. P., £11,791.

WARE, or WEAR-GIFFORD, a parish in the hundred of Shebbear, co. of Devon. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Barnstaple and dio. of Exeter, rated at £13 5s., and, in 1829, in patronage of Lord Fortescue. Church ded. to the Holy Trinity. Here is a small school endowed with £15 annual income, at which 16 poor children receive instruction. Distance from Great Torrington, 2½ m. N.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 419; in 1831, 547. A. P., £1,911.

WAREHAM,

A borough and market-town, containing the three parishes of the Holy Trinity, Lady-St-Mary and Out parish, and St Martin's; with the liberty of Stoborough, locally in the hundred of Winfrith, Blandford, or southern division of the co. of Dorset, but has independent jurisdiction. This town existed under the name of Darngeis in the time of the Romans, and has been by some supposed to have been built on the site of Morionium or Moriconium of Ravennas. Having afterwards fallen into the hands of the Anglo-Saxons, it was by them denominated Vepham and Thornæcta, this latter still showing traces of its more ancient name; sometimes also Warham and Var-ama, which last may be considered a derivation from the Saxon words Var Ham, signifying a habitation on a fishing shore. In 800 it became the burial place of Brithric, the last king of Wessex, who was unintentionally poisoned by his wife Eadburga. Here also was deposited, till its removal to Shaftesbury, the body of Edward the Martyr. The Danes about this time massacred the inhabitants, and plundered the town, which, however, appears soon to have recovered its prosperity, as we find it again flourishing in the reign of Athelstan, who established two mints here. It was some time after again plundered by the Danes, who continued to attack it for some time from the station they had seized in the isle of Wight. It was alternately in the hands of both parties during the struggle between Stephen of Blair and the Empress Matilda. In 1213, Peter of Pomfret was executed here as a punishment for his foretelling the speedy deposition of the tyrannical King John. During the parliamentary war it was again its fate to be in the possession sometimes of the royalist, and at others of the parliamentary party, but finally fell into the possession of the latter. In the year 1762 it suffered dreadfully from fire, about two-thirds of the town having been burnt. It was, however, by means of a subscription and an act of parliament for its restoration speedily put in its former state. "Here is said to have been a nunnery in the Saxon times, before the year 876, when this town was assaulted and taken by the Danes. After the conquest one or more of the churches in this town, with some lands in the neighbourhood, being given by Robert, earl of Leicester, temp. Henry I., to the abbot and convent of Lira in Normandy, they sent over and settled here a cell of their own Benedictine monks, which was ded. to the Virgin Mary. When the alien priories, during the wars with France, were seized into the king's hands, the priory of Montgrace in Yorkshire had the revenues of this for some years; but when these foreign houses were dissolved, King Henry V. gave this, ann. reg. III., to the Carthusians of Shene, and as parcel of this last mentioned monastery, the priory of Warham was granted, 1st Mary, to Thomas Reve and George Cotton."—Tanner's Not. Mon. Roman colus have been found here, and a

Description.—The town is situated between the mouths of the rivers Frome and Piddle, and is laid out with very remarkable regularity. It is almost in the form of a parallelogram, and consists of four principal streets diverging at right angles, and several smaller ones which follow the same rule. These run exactly from north to south, and from east to west. The southern entrance to the town is over a bridge which crosses the Frome, being a handsome structure erected in 1775, on the site of an old one which was built not long after the Norman conquest; it consists of five arches, and is of stone. The northern entrance in like manner crosses a bridge of three arches over the Piddle. In continuance of both bridges are two elevated causeways, that from the Frome bridge being about three quarters of a mile in length, leading towards Stow-borough, and the other to North Port. The town is almost surrounded by an earthen rampart, between which and the buildings are several garden grounds; in this part of the town several remains of the more ancient part of the town are still found. These gardens furnish an abundant supply of vegetables, not only for the consumption of the town itself, but also of Portsmouth and Poole. A great proportion of the females of the town are employed in the manufacture of straw-plait, stockings, and shirt-buttons; and pipe-clay being found in the neighbourhood in great abundance, about 10,000 tons of it are annually exported to London, Hull, Liverpool, and Glasgow. The exports consist principally of cotton and other manufactured goods, coals, and grocery. Here was formerly a salmon fishery of great extent, which formed part of the dowry which Henry VII. granted to his queen: salmon was then caught here in such abundance, that apprentices usually made it an express condition in their indentures, that they should not have salmon above three times in the week; an agreement which would now be considered rather superfluous, as few fish are caught, and in fact the fishery has been almost entirely abandoned. Wareham was formerly a port of some repute, but its harbour has been destroyed by the retreat of the sea; the quay which remains is consequently useless. In the time of Edward III. it furnished three ships and 59 men for the siege of Calais. Saturday is market-day, and fairs for cattle, cheese, and hogs, are held on Midsummer day, April 17th, and September 11th; the toll of which belongs to the mayor. Six cattle fairs have recently been held in the course of the spring. Pop., in 1801, 1627; in 1831, 2325. A. P., £3,534.

Municipal Government.—The town is now governed under a charter granted by Queen Anne in 1703, by a mayor, six capital and twelve assistant burgesses, with a recorder, town-clerk, and subordinate officers. Courts of quarter session are held by the mayor and capital burgesses, who are also entitled to hold a court of record on the first Monday of every month for the recovery of debts not exceeding £40. The mayor is also coroner for the town and the isles of Purbeck and Brownsea. The lord of the manor holds here an annual court-baron. The freedom of the town is obtained by gift from the corporation. Wareham is a borough by prescription, and has received charters from various monarchs. Wareham returned two members to parliament since the 30th Edward I., and the elective franchise was held by the mayor, resident scot and lot payers, in addition to all freeholders of lands and tenements for the space of a year before the election, in number about 338. The reform act has reduced the representation to one member, and included within the boundaries, the parishes of Corfe-castle and Bere-Regis, with the out-parishes of Lady-St-Mary, Holy Trinity, and St Martin, the chapelry of Arne, and portions of the parishes of East Stoke, and East Morden. The number of new electors is 168.

Parishes, &c.—This town comprehends the parishes of the Holy Trinity, St Martin within and without, and Lady-St-Mary within and without, all of which are in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol. The living of the Holy Trinity is a rectory with those of St Mary and St Martin, rated at £7 5s. 6d., and, in 1829, in patronage of John Calcraft, Esq. The living of St Mary's is not in charge; that of St Martin is rated at £8 2s. 6d. The churches of the Holy Trinity and St Martin's have been disused; as also are those of St Peter and St Michael, which formerly existed. The church of St Mary is an ancient structure in a mixed style of English architecture, with some traces of the Saxon. It is supposed to have been attached to the ancient priory, and to have been rebuilt about the period of the conquest. Above the north door is a rudely sculptured representation of the crucifixion. On the south side of the church is a small chapel, the roof of which is richly groined, and which contains several mural monuments to the members of the Calcraft family, and two ancient monuments on which are recumbent effigies of warriors clad in complete armour. Here lie also the remains of Mr Hutchins, author of the 'History and Antiquities of the county of Dorset,' and formerly rector of this parish. The Wesleyan Methodists, Independents, and Unitarians, have places of worship here. In the parish of Lady-St-Mary is a free school, founded and endowed with £25 per annum by George Pittby of Stratfieldsaye, and in 1703 by Henry Harbin, with £200. Here is a British free school lately erected by the Independents, who have also a reading-room and library in which lectures are delivered during the winter. Here are almshouses for six aged men and five women, founded by John Streche, Esq. of Exeter; its revenues are rated in the chantry roll at £11 13s. 10d., and it was rebuilt in 1740 by Henry Drax and John Pitt, Esq. Dr John Chapman, tutor to the celebrated Lord Camden, and Horace Walpole, the well known earl of Orford, were natives of this town. Here are extensive remains of the walls erected by the Danes in the time of Alfred, and the mound of the ancient castle still exists under the name of Castle-Hill; there are also some small remains of the priory included within the walls of a dwelling-house. At Stow borough was a large barrow, which was opened in 1767, when a large hollow trunk of an oak was found containing human bones, with several other antiquities. Distance from Dorchester, 17 m. E. by S., and from London, 112 m. S. by W.

WAREHORNE, a parish in the hundred of Ham, lathes of Shepway, co. of Kent. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury, rated at £19, and in patronage of the lord-chancellor. Church ded. to St Matthew. Fairs for toys and cattle are held here on May 13th and October 2d and 3d. The parish extends into the hundred of Romney marsh and into the hundred of Blackbourn. Here are the sources of the rivers Medway, Rother, and Stour, and the parish is crossed by the Grand Military canal from Hythe to Rye. Distance from Ashford, 7½ m. S. by W. Pop., in 1801, 411; in 1831, 439. A. P., £3,157.

WARESLEY, a parish in the hundred of Toseland, co. of Huntingdon. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Huntingdon and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £8 16s. 5½d., and in the patronage of the master and fellows of Pembroke-hall, Cambridge. Church ded. to St Andrew. Distance from St Neot's, 6 m. S.E. Pop., in 1801, 195; in 1831, 241. A. P., £2,045.

WARETON, or WIVERTON, a hamlet in the parish of Tytheby, co. of Nottingham.

WARFIELD, a parish in the hundred of Wargrave, co. of Berks. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Beotts and dio. of Salisbury, rated at £13 6s. 8d., returned at £140, and, in 1829, in patronage of Maxwell Windle, Esq. The church is ded. to St Michael, and contains, besides some handsome monuments, a sepulchral chapel belonging to the Staverton family, in which is an ancient brass with an effigy of one of the members of that family. This chapel is on the north side of the church. Fairs are held at New Bracknell in this parish on April 25th, August 22d, and October 1st. Here is a school on the national system supported by voluntary contribution. The school-room was erected on land given by the late Lord Braybrooke, at an expense of £200, bequeathed by the Hon. Gen. William Hervey. This parish was formerly included in Windsor forest. Distance from Wokingham, 6 m. E.N.E. Pop., in 1801, 820; in 1831, 1207. A. P., £4,698.

WARFORD (GREAT), a township in the parish of Alderley, hundred of Macclesfield, co.-palatine of Chester. The Baptists have a place of worship here. Distance from Nether Knutsford, 5 m. E. by S. Pop., in 1801, 287; in 1831, 349. A. P., £2,200.

WARFORD (LITTLE), a township in the parish of Rosthern, eastern division of the hundred of Bucklow, co.-palatine of Chester. Distance from Nether-Knutsford, 4½ m. E.S.E. The pop., with that of the township of Martall, was, in 1801, 260; in 1831, 281. A. P., £2,077.

WARGRAVE, a hundred in the co. of Berks, containing 3 parishes, and, in 1831, 3369 inhabitants.

WARGRAVE, a parish in the hundred of Wargrave, co. of Berks. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Berks and dio. of Salisbury, rated at £13 13s. 6½d., and, in 1829, in the patronage of Lord Braybrooke. The church, which is ded. to St Mary, is in the later style of English architecture, and was lately enlarged, on which occasion the incorporated society for the enlargement of churches and chapels, granted £200 towards defraying the expense of 150 free sittings. The parish lies on the south side of the river Thames, on the banks of which is some fine meadow land. It is situated in the midst of a beautiful country, in which are many handsome gentlemen's seats. Here is a large chalk pit. In 1208, a market held on Mondays was granted to Peter de Rupibus, bishop of Winchester. The market place yet remains; but the market has, long since, fallen into disuse. Lord Braybrooke, who is improPRIATOR of the rectorial tithes, is descended from Sir Henry Nevill, to whom Edward VI. granted the hundred of Wargrave and the Billinbear estates, which formerly were annexed to the see of Winchester. Here is a school in which four poor children are taught on an endowment of £5 per annum, given in 1692 by Richard Alworth; and 20 children of each sex are clothed and educated on the interest of £6,700, 3 per cent. stock bequeathed in 1796 by Robert Pigot, Esq. Distance from Reading, 6½ m. N.E. by E. Pop., in 1801, 1134; in 1831, 1423. A. P., £6,609.

WARHAM, a village in the northern division of the hundred of Greenhoe, co. of Norfolk. It comprises the parishes of All Saints, St Mary, and St Mary Magdalene, in the archd. and dio. of Norwich, and, in 1829, in patronage of Thomas W. Coke, Esq. The living of All Saints is a discharged rectory, rated at £16; that of St Mary is a rectory rated at £5; and that of St Mary Magdalene a rectory at £6 6s. 8d. Here are remains of some ancient fortifications and of an old baronial mansion surrounded by a moat. Distance from Wells, 2 m. S.E. by E. Pop., in 1801, 823; in 1831, 451. A. P., £2,068.

WARK, a parish in the north-western division of the ward of Tindale, co. of Northumberland. It comprises the quarters of High Shillington, Low Shillington, and Wark, with the township of Warkburn. This parish formerly was a portion of the extensive parish of Simonburn, which was divided into six in 1811, in terms of the act of parliament, 51st Geo. III., c. 194. Living, a rectory, not in charge, in the archd. of Northumberland and dio. of Durham, and in patronage of the governors of Greenwich hospital. The church is a handsome Gothic structure, founded in 1815, and opened for divine service in 1818. The Presbyterians have a place of worship here. Here is a ferry over the North Tyne, which bounds the parish on the east. In October, the governors of Greenwich hospital, as lords of the manor, hold courts leet and baron. Here is a school conducted on the national system, erected at the joint expense of the governors of Greenwich hospital and the trustees of Heron's charity. The village is ancient, but has a number of handsome stone houses. Here are remains of an old church, and vestiges of ancient fortifications said to have been thrown up by Edward III. Near the river is Mead-hill, on which was formerly a tower. Here are also a tumulus and cairn, which, when opened, were found to contain urns and other relics. Distance from Bellingham, 4½ m. S.S.E. Pop. of the quarter of Wark, in 1801, 304; in 1831, 417: the remaining returns of pop. are made with the different townships, and the return of assessed property is included in that of Simonburn.

WARKLEY, or WARKLEIGH, a parish in the hundred of South Molton, co. of Devon. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Barnstaple and dio. of Exeter, rated at £14 4s. 7d., and, by lapse, in the patronage of the bishop of Exeter. Church ded. to St John. Here is a school supported by subscription. Distance from South Molton, 5½ m. W.S.W. Pop., in 1801, 291; in 1831, 283. A. P., £1,371.

WARKSBURN, a township in the parish of Wark, north-western division of the ward of Tindale, co. of Northumberland. Distance from Hexham, 13 m. N.W. Pop., in 1801, 258; in 1831, 278. A. P. returned with that of Simonburn.

WARKTHWAITE, a hamlet in the parish of Greystock, co. of Cumberland.

WARKTON, a parish in the hundred of Huxlow, co. of Northampton. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough, rated at £18 16s. 3d., and, in 1829, in patronage of the duke of Buccleugh. The church—which is ded. to St Edmund—contains some magnificent monuments to members of the Montague family, two of which are from the chisel of Roubilliac. Distance from Kettering, 2½ m. E.N.E. Pop., in 1801, 220; in 1831, 300. A. P., £1,805.

WARKWORTH, a parish in the hundred of King's-Sutton, co. of Northampton. Living, a perpetual curacy, formerly a rectory, in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough, not in charge, and annexed to the vicarage of Martin-St-Lawrence. Church ded. to St Mary. Distance from Banbury, 2 m. E. Pop., with the hamlets of Grimsbury and Nethercote, in 1801, 260; in 1831, 521. A. P., £6,173.

WARKWORTH, a parish in the eastern division of the ward of Morpeth, co. of Northumberland. It comprises the townships of Amble, Acklington, Acklington-Park, Bellington, Brotherick, Bullockshall, High and Low Buxton, East and West Chivington, Gloster-hill, Hauxley, Hadston, Morrick, Stacion-Grange, Walk-Mill, and Warkworth, and the extra-parochial liberty of Tegton. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Northumberland and dio. of Durham, rated at £18 5s. 7½d., and in patronage of the bishop of Carlisle. The church is ded. to St Lawrence, and is said by tradition to have been originally built about 736, by Ceolwulf, king of Northbris; this structure has, however, been long since replaced by the present edifice, which is a handsome building, with a spire about 100 ft. in height. At the western extremity is a monument erected to the memory of Sir Hugh de Morwick, to whose liberality the inhabitants are indebted for the common. The Wesleyan Methodists, and Seceders from the church of Scotland, have places of worship here. Here is a school conducted on the Madras system of education, the school-room belonging to which was erected by subscription in 1824, in lieu of one erected in 1736 by G. Lawson, Esq., which latter is now sometimes used as a town-hall. Here are also an infant school, and a school on the national plan for girls. Here are the ruins of an ancient priory, situated near the churchyard, which was formerly "a cell of two Benedictine monks from Durham, for whose maintenance here Nicholas de Farnham, bishop of Durham, who died A. D. 1257, appropriated the church of Brankston, which was confirmed by Walter de Kirkham, his successor."—Tanner's Not. Mon. Warkworth consists principally of one street, leading from the bridge to the castle, and containing many excellent houses, with two inns. It is situated not far from the sea, and is almost surrounded by the river Coquet, which is here crossed by an ancient stone-bridge, consisting of two arches, with a gateway under a tower at the southern extremity, in which was formerly a portcullis of iron. There are a number of quarries within the parish, principally of coal, limestone, &c. There was formerly a market, under charter of King John, which has, however, long fallen into disuse. Fairs for cattle are held on the first Thursday in May, the Thursdays before August 18th and November 23d, and also on November 23d. This village is thought to have been erected into a borough by the Saxon King Coelwulph, formerly mentioned as having founded the church. An annual court-leet is held here on the first Wednesday in October by the duke of Northumberland, for the election of a borough-reeve, two moorgrievs, three constables, and other officers. The ruins of Warkworth castle are in this parish, of which the following account is taken from "Grose's antiquities of England and Wales:—" "This castle stands on an eminence adjoining to the south end of the town of Warkworth; its west side overlooks the river Coquet, which, after almost surrounding it, at the distance of about a mile, empties itself into the sea. Nothing can be more magnificent and picturesque from what part soever it is viewed; and though, when entire, it was far from being destitute of strength, yet its appearance does not excite the idea of one of those rugged fortresses destined solely for war, whose gloomy towers present to the imagination only dungeons, chains, and executions, but rather that of an ancient hospitable mansion. The castle and moat, according to an ancient survey, contained 5 acres 17½ perches of ground. Its walls, on the south, east, and west sides, are garnished with towers. The great gate of the castle is on the south side, between two polygonal towers, and is also defended with machicolations. The keep, or dungeon, forms the north front; its figure is a square with the angles canted off. Near the middle of each face of this square there is a turret, projecting at right angles, its end terminating in a semi-hexagon; these projections are of the same height as the rest of the keep. This keep is very large and lofty, and contains a variety of magnificent apartments; above it rises a high watch-tower, commanding almost an unbounded prospect. On the north side, next the street, are several figures of angels bearing armorial shields; and at the top of the turret, in the middle, is carved in bas-relief, a large lion rampant. When Leland wrote his Itinerary, this castle was in thorough repair; his words are,—'Warkworth castell stondeythe on the south syde of Coquet water; it is well maynteyned, and is large.' At that time, the Percy family was under attainer, and Warkworth, &c. in the hands of the crown; during which this castle was probably neglected and fell into decay, as appears from a survey taken in 1567, and preserved among the archives of the duke of Northumberland. This castle—principally the buildings in the outer court—for want of repairs, and growing still more ruinous, a warrant was granted to Mr Whitehead, one of the stewards to the earl, dated the 25th of June, 1608, 'to take down the lead that lieth upon the ruinous towers and places of Warkworth, to weigh it and lay it up, and to certify his lordship of the quantity thereof, that the places where lead is taken off be covered again for the preservation of the timber.' And in 1610, the old timber of the buildings in the outer court was sold for £28. In 1672, the donjon, or keep of the castle, was unroofed, &c. at the instance of Joseph Clarke, one of the auditors to the family, who obtained a gift of the materials from the then countess of Northumberland. Warkworth was formerly the barony of Roger Fitz-Richard, who held it by the service of one knight's fee; it was granted to him by King Henry II., together with the manor of Corbrig, &c. These were confirmed to him by Richard I. In his family it—the barony—continued till the reign of Edward II., when John de Clavering, the possessor, dying without heirs, it reverted to the crown. It was granted to Sir Henry Percy, in whose family it continued till the 8th of Richard II. when the estates were for a time confiscated, the earl of Northumberland having fallen under suspicion of treason; but his innocence having soon become apparent, he was restored to his honours and estates. "In the succeeding reign of Henry IV., when that king quarrelled with the Percies, who had helped him to the crown, this castle was taken from the earl of Northumberland and betowed upon Sir Robert Umfraville, in whose possession it continued till the restoration of the Percy family in the succeeding reign. After the restoration of the Percy family, in the second year of King Henry V., this castle continued in possession of the earls of Northumberland, till, at the conclusion of the civil wars of York and Lancaster, this great family was again attainted, being involved in the ruin that attended the house of Lancaster, to which they were firm adherents. But this cloud soon blew over, for in the 12th of King Edward IV., this Sir Henry Percy was restored in blood to the earldom of Northumberland, and to all such hereditaments of his father as came to the king's hands; and the attainder was made void. The beautiful situation and elegant structure of this castle, rendered it for many ages the favourite residence of the Percy family. Most of the earls of Northumberland appear to have resided here when their affairs required their presence in Northumberland; and their larger castle of Alnwick was rather used as a military fortress and filled with a garrison, than as a place of abode." To the west of the castle is an ancient hermitage, with a chapel in the early style of English architecture; which has been celebrated by Dr Percy in a beautiful poem entitled the hermit of Warkworth. The duke of Northumberland takes the inferior title of baron from this place. Distance from Alnwick, 7 m. S.E. Pop., in 1801, 260; in 1831, 521. A. P., £6,173.

WARLABY, a township in the parish of Ainderby-Steeple, eastern division of the wapentake of Gilling, N. R. of the co. of York. Pop., in 1801, 60; in 1831, 76. A. P., £1,519.

WARLEGGON, a parish in the hundred of West, co. of Cornwall. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Cornwall and dio. of Exeter, rated at £5 17s. 6d., returned at £143 2s. 3d., and, in 1829, in patronage of G. W. F. Gregor, Esq. Church ded. to St Bartholomew. The parish is crossed by a branch of the river Fowey, and is 5½ m. E.N.E. from Bodmin. Pop., in 1801, 166; in 1831, 274. A. P., £1,127.

WARLEY, a township in the parish of Halifax, wapentake of Morley, W. R. of the co. of York. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in the manufactures of cotton, worsted, and stuffs. The Independents have places of worship here. In the neighbourhood is a remarkable rocking stone. In this township is the chapelry of Sowerby-Bridge. Living, a perpetual curacy, returned at £144 17s., also that of Luddenden, at £78 15s. 4d. Warley is mentioned in Doomsday-book as one of the 9 barawics belonging to the lordship of Wakefield, by the name of Werla. Earl Warren was found to be lord of it at the time of Kirby's inquest. In this family it remained till the last earl gave it, with the manor of Wakefield, to the crown. Distance from Halifax, 3 m. W. Pop., in 1801, 3546; in 1831, 5685. A. P., £622.

WARLEY, a hamlet in the parish of Bathford, co. of Somerset.

WARLEY (GREAT), a parish in the hundred of Chafford, co. of Essex. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Essex and dio. of London, rated at £14, and in patronage of the master and fellows of St John's college, Cambridge. Church ded. to St Mary. Distance from Brentwood, 3½ m. S. Pop., in 1801, 430; in 1831, 424. A. P., £3,360.

WARLEY (LITTLE), a parish in the hundred of Chafford, co. of Essex. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Essex and dio. of London, rated at £11 3s. 9d., and, in 1829, in patronage of Earl Brownlow and Miss Tirrell. Church ded. to St Peter. Here are barracks capable of accommodating 2000 cavalry. Distance from Brentwood, 3½ m. S. by E. Pop., in 1801, 169; in 1831, 163. A. P., £1,630.

WARLEY-WIGORN, a township in the parish of Hales Owen, lower division of the hundred of Halfshire, co. of Worcester. Here is a school in which nine children are educated on an endowment of £9 per ann., bequeathed in 1797 by John Moore. It is 3 m. N.E. by E. from Hales-Owen. Pop., in 1801, 718; in 1831, 921. A. P., £2,004.

WARLINGHAM, a parish in the second division of the hundred of Tandridge, co. of Surrey. Living, a vicarage, to which is annexed the perpetual curacy of Chelsham, rated at £11 12s. 1ld., in the archd. of Surrey and dio. of Winchester, and, in 1829, in patronage of A. W. Wiggall, Esq. Church ded. to All Saints. Distance from Croydon, 5 m. S.S.E. Pop., in 1801, 187; in 1831, 454. A. P., £1,364.

WARLINGTON, a manor in the parish of Hellingley, co. of Sussex. "It is a small manor and borough by itself, about 5 m. in circumference; it holds a court-leet and court-baron, chooses a headborough for its own district, and all the inhabitants are exempted from serving assizes and sessions."—Burrell's MS., No. 5682.

WARMFIELD, a parish in the lower division of the wapentake of Agbrigg, W. R. of the co. of York. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of York, rated at £5 4s. 2d., and in patronage of the master and fellows of Clare hall, Cambridge. Church ded. to St Peter. It contains the townships of Sharneton and Warmfield with Heath. Here is a school founded and endowed by Dame Mary Bowles of Heath-hall, in 1660, for educating and apprenticing children; the endowment amounts to £20, to which, in 1729, John Smyth, Esq. added three houses and £4 per annum, for the education of six children. Here is an hospital for seven men and a matron, to be chosen from the parishes of Warmfield and Normanton alternately, founded and endowed in 1591, by John Freston; and another hospital for four old widows, founded in 1556 by Mr Oles Sagar. Distance from Wakefield, 3½ m. E. Pop., in 1801, 804; in 1831, 995. A. P., £5,237.

WARMINGHAM, a parish in the hundred of Northwich, co.-palatine of Chester. It comprises the townships of Elton, Moston, Tetton, and Warmingham, the united pop. being 1167. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Chester, rated at £12 4s. 7½d., and, in 1829, in patronage of Lord Crewe. Church ded. to St Leonard. Here is a free school founded and endowed with land yielding £15 per annum, by Thomas Minshall. Courts leet and baron are occasionally held here. Distance from Sandbach, 3½ m. W. Pop. of the township of Warmingham, in 1801, 846; in 1831, 372. A. P., £2,856. The remaining returns will be found under the several townships.

WARMINGHURST, a parish in the hundred of Easwirth, rape of Bramber, co. of Sussex. Living, a perpetual curacy not in charge, in the archd. and dio. of Chichester, and in patronage of the duke of Norfolk. Distance from Steyning, 6 m. N.W. Pop., in 1801, 112; in 1831, 113. A. P., £900.

WARMINGTON, a parish partly in the hundred of Willybrook, and partly in that of Polebrooke, co. of Northampton. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough, rated at £13 6s. 8d., returned at £141 10s., and, in 1829, in patronage of the earl of Westmoreland. The church is ded. to St Mary, and is principally in the early English style of architecture, with a beautiful spire and tower. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here. Here is a mineral spring. The school has a small endowment. Distance from Oundle, 3½ m. N.E. Pop., in 1801, 450; in 1831, 617. A. P., £4,981.

WARMINGTON, a parish in the Burton-Dasset division of the hundred of Kingston, co. of Warwick. It contains the township of Arlescote. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Coventry, and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, rated at £16 3s. 11½d., and, in 1829, in patronage of Mrs Farrer. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here. Here are traces of an ancient encampment called Nadbury camp, about 12 acres in extent, and supposed by some to have been the ancient station Tripontium. "Here was an alien priory of Benedictine monks, from the abbey of St Peter and St Paul, De Pratellis, or Preaux, in Normandy, to which this manor with the church were given by Henry Newburgh, earl of Warwick, in the time of Henry I. It was in after times accounted sometimes a distinct religious house, at other times as parcel of the priory of Toftes in Norfolk, belonging to the same foreign monastery. After the dissolution of these alien priories it was granted, 7th Henry VI., to the Carthusians at Wytham in Somersetshire, and as parcel of their possessions was granted, 35th Henry VIII., to William and Francis Sheldon."—Tanner's Not. Mon. Distance from Kineton, 6 m. E. S.E. Pop., in 1801, 395; in 1831, 470. A. P., £3,074.

WARMINSTER, a hundred in the co. of Wilts, containing 10 parishes, and, in 1831, 10,728 inhabitants.

WARMINSTER, a parish and market-town in the above hundred. The name is supposed to be derived from the wears on the river near the town, and a minster or monastery said to have existed in the vicinity, on a situation still known by the name of the nunnery. Camden conceives this to have been the Vertucio of the Romans, and, but with little apparent probability, regards the name as being corrupted from this. It is mentioned in the Norman survey under the name of Guermistre, and was then regarded as an ancient place, possessed of many privileges. The town is situated at the south-western extremity of Salisbury-Plain, consisting of one street about a mile in length, with many respectable houses in it. The river Willey flows past the town, which is considered one of the most salubrious in England, many instances of the longevity of the inhabitants having been noticed. The townhall, which was recently erected by the marquess of Bath, is a handsome building containing a hall, in which the quarter and other sessions are held, besides rooms for assemblies and public meetings. Saturday is market day, and fairs are held on April 22d, August 10th, and October 26th; the last being always best attended, and large quantities of cattle, horses, dairy and farm produce, being then sold. Large quantities of corn, amounting to about 2,500 quarters, are sold every market day, and the value of this article sold in the town amounted in 1828 to about £160,000. The malt trade is still carried on here to a considerable extent, although it is not so great as it formerly was. The manufacture of broad cloth has also fallen off of late years. Many of the females are employed in the silk manufacture recently introduced. These declines in trade are principally to be ascribed to the want of good canal communication with other places. Here are held in July the quarter sessions for the county. Petty sessions are held here every month by the magistrates of the town. A court of requests, for the recovery of debts under £5, is held every alternate Tuesday; the jurisdiction of which extends over the hundreds of Heytesbury, Warminster, and Westbury. The marquess of Bath holds a manorial court here once a year for the election of a high constable, deputy, constables and tithingmen, for the government of the town. The living is a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Salisbury, rated at £18 0s. 2½d., and in patronage of the bishop of Salisbury. The church, a building of mixed styles, is ded. to St Denis, and stands near the western extremity of the town. The tower is the only part of the ancient structure, having been built in the reign of Edward III., whilst the rest of the building was renewed in 1724. A chapel-of-ease, built in the reign of Edward I., and endowed by two sisters, stands near the market-place, and, like St Denis' church, was all renewed in 1725 except the tower. In addition to these was recently erected a new church, under the name of Christ church; it was built partly by public subscription, and partly by parliamentary grant. The Baptists, Wesleyan Methodists, Independents, and Unitarians, have places of worship here. Here is a free school founded by the first Viscount Weymouth. Twenty boys are instructed here, and the master receives £30 per annum, and is appointed by the marquess of Bath. Here is also a Lancasterian school for girls, and a school on the national system for both sexes, both of which derive their support from annual subscriptions. The remains of many Roman works are found here, among which may be mentioned Battlesbury, which is an earthwork with double sides, where many Roman antiquities are found. Remains of a Roman villa have also been discovered, in which were found a curious tessellated pavement, which was, however, in bad preservation, but a picture of Diana was fortunately so perfect as to admit of removal, and it is still preserved at Longleat house, the seat of the marquess of Bath here. On the summit of Clay-hill is a lofty tumulus, formerly used as a beacon; and many British tumuli exist here, in some of which, when opened, various antiquities have been found. Many fossil remains have been found in this parish, and there is an account in the volume for 1817 of the Medical and Physical Journal, of a living toad and newt having been discovered the year before, completely imbedded in stone. Dr Squire, some time bishop of St David's, well known as a writer, and Dr Huntingtonford, bishop of Hereford, were both born here. Distance from Salisbury, 21 m. W.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 4932; in 1831, 6115. A. P., £17,381.

WARMLEY, a hamlet in the parish of Sutton-Coldfield, co. of Warwick. Distance from Sutton-Coldfield, 3 m. S.E.

WARMOOR, a hamlet in the parish of Stoke-St. Gregory, co. of Somerset.

WARMSWORTH, a parish in the lower division of the wapentake of Strafforth and Tickhill, W. R. of the co. of York. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of York, rated at £6 10s. 10d., and, in 1829, in patronage of W. Wrightston, Esq. Church ded. to St Peter. The steeple, containing a bell, is about half a mile from the church. Some lime is produced here from a few limekilns within the parish. George Fox, who founded the Society of Friends, held the first meetings of that body in this place. It is $\frac{3}{4}$ m. S.W. from Doncaster. Pop., in 1801, 254; in 1831, 362. A. P., £2,471.

WARMWELL, a parish in the hundred of Winfrith, Blandford division of the co. of Dorset. Living, a rectory united since 1749, to that of Poxwell, in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, rated at £15. Distance from Dorchester, $\frac{5}{4}$ m. S.E. by S. Pop., in 1801, 105; in 1831, 87. A. P., £1,017.

WARNBOROUGH (NORTH), a tything in the parish and hundred of Odiham, Basingstoke division of the co. of Southampton. Pop., in 1801, 427; pop. in 1831, and A. P. returned with Odiham, from which it is 1 m. N.W.

WARNBOROUGH (SOUTH), a parish in the hundred of Bermondspit, Basingstoke division of the co. of Southampton. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Winchester, rated at £14 12s. 3 $\frac{1}{4}$ d., and in the patronage of the president and fellows of St John's college, Oxford. Church ded. to St Andrew. Here is a Sunday school, endowed in 1785 by the Rev. John Duman, D. D., with a gift of £200. Distance from Odiham, $\frac{2}{3}$ m. S.W. by S. Pop., in 1801, 246; in 1831, 374. A. P., £2,839.

WARDON, or WARMEDON, a parish in the lower division of the hundred of Oswaldslow, co. of Worcester. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Worcester, rated at £10 0s. 2 $\frac{1}{4}$ d., and, in 1829, in patronage of B. Johnson, Esq., a trustee for R. Berkley, Esq., a Roman Catholic. Church ded. to St Nicholas. The parish is crossed by the Birmingham and Worcester canal, and is 3 m. N.E. by E. from Worcester. Pop., in 1801, 126; in 1831, 171. A. P., £2,463.

WARNFORD, a township in the parish of Bamborough, north division of the ward of Bamborough, co. of Northumberland. Here is a Presbyterian chapel founded in 1750. This was formerly a much more considerable village than at present. Distance from Belford, 4 m. S.E. by S. Pop., in 1801, 32; in 1831, 35.

WARNFORD, a parish in the upper division of the hundred of Meon-Stoke, Portsmouth division of the co. of Southampton. Living, a rectory rated at £21 9s. 4 $\frac{1}{4}$ d., and in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the bishop of Winchester. The Independents have a place of worship here. Here is a ruin described by Grose under the name of King John's house.—“This venerable ruin,” says he, “which has so long remained unnoticed by the curious, stands in the garden of the earl of Clanricarde at Warnford. It is known by the title of King John's house, an appellation common to many ancient structures, in which that king had no concern. In a map of Hampshire, engraved by Norden about 1610, this building is marked as a ruined place, and in some writings of a more ancient date, belonging to the Clanricarde family, it is conveyed with the manor and present mansion, by the denomination of the old house. What it originally was can only be conjectured. Two ancient inscriptions on the parish church seem to afford some grounds to suppose it the ancient church built by Wilfrid, bishop of York, between the years 679, when he took refuge among the South Saxons, and 685, when he returned to his see.” The word renovavit in that inscription is the only ground on which the conjecture is founded, and Mr Grose thinks that the style of the building favours the notion. Mr Griffin, rector of Warnford, however, is of opinion that the rebuilding of the church took place on the original foundation; and he says, in a letter to Mr Grose,—“The inscriptions on the present church leave me no room to doubt whether Adam de Porter rebuilt on Wilfrid's foundation, if I had nothing else to confirm me in that opinion. But the present church is annexed to a tower in a more ancient style of architecture than the church itself. I think it is very visible that the present church is wider by about three feet on each side of the tower than the former one. The masonry of the tower is very superior to that of the church; the round arch is found in the tower, the pointed arch invariably in the church. The boundaries of the present church-yard do not include the ruin, which, I think, would have been the case if it stood on ground once consecrated.” This house, in all probability, formed part of the old manor house. Distance from Bishop's-Waltham, 6 m. N.E. Pop., in 1831, 296; in 1831, 418. A. P., £2,708.

WARNHAM, a parish in the hundred of Singlecross, rape of Bramber, co. of Sussex. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Chichester, rated at £10 1s. 0^d., and in patronage of the dean and chapter of Canterbury. Church ded. to St Margaret. Distance from Horsham, 3 m. N.N.W. Pop., in 1801, 680; in 1831, 952. A. P., £2,608.

WARNINGCAMP, a tything in the parish of Leominster, hundred of Poling, rape of Arundel, co. of Sussex. Distance from Arundel, 2 m. E. Pop., in 1801, 121; in 1831, 104. A. P., £804.

WARPSGROVE, a parish in the hundred of Ewelme, co. of Oxford. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Oxford, rated at £2 11s. 10^d., and in patronage of the lord-chancellor. Church ded. to St James. Pop., in 1801, 25; in 1831, 36. A. P., £780.

WARRENT, a parish in the hundred of Castle-Martin, co. of Pembroke, South Wales. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of St David's, rated at £4 2s. 2^d., returned at £49 12s. 11^d., and in patronage of the bishop of St David's. Distance from Pembroke, 5 m. S.W. Pop., in 1801, 160; in 1831, 169. A. P., £732.

WARRENTON, a township in the parish of Bamfborough, northern division of the hundred of Bamfborough, co. of Northumberland. Distance from Belford, 2 m. S.S.W. Pop., in 1801, 97; in 1831, 158.

WARRINGTON, a hamlet in the parish of Olney, hundred of Newport, co. of Buckingham. Distance from Olney, 1½ m. N. by E. Pop., in 1831, 74.

WARRINGTON,

A parish in the hundred of West Derby, co.-palatine of Lancaster. It contains the chapelry of Burton-wood, the townships of Poulton-with-Fearnhead, Rixton, and Woolston-with-Martinscroft, and the market-town of Warrington. The aggregate pop., in 1801, was 13,180; in 1831, 19,155. A. P., £45,694. Pop. of the township of Warrington, in 1801, 10,567; in 1831, 16,018. A. P., £29,069. The place is of great antiquity, and is indeed supposed by some to have been a British town, even before the Roman invasion, and in the year 79, to have been, by the Roman general, Agricola, converted into a Roman station. The opinion as to its identity with the station, concerning which these facts are recorded, rests principally on the circumstance of there being three roads towards a ford over the Mersey at this place, and of there being still found traces of an encampment, in the site of which many curious Roman antiquities have been found. In the time of the Anglo-Saxons it obtained its present name, being then called Werington, which seems to show that the fortification had been of some consequence, the name being derived from the Saxon word Wæring, signifying a fortification. It formerly gave its name to a wapentake, afterwards included in the hundred of West Derby. In the reign of Edward the Confessor it formed part of the royal demesne.

It is mentioned under the name of Wallington in Domesday-book; and in the reign of Edward I. it obtained the grant of a market, with other privileges, by means of William le Boteler, who was the lord of the town. Leland in his Itinerary, with reference to this place, says that it was in the reign of Henry VIII., "a pavid town of a pretty bignes, the paroch church is at the taylor of the town; it is a better market than Manchester." At the time of the revolutionary war, Warrington declared for, and was in consequence taken possession of, and held by the king against the parliamentary forces; which latter party, in 1643, besieged the royalists in the church, and after a well contested siege of five days, having erected an effective battery to bear upon the church, compelled Col. Norris, with about 1600 men, to capitulate. A large quantity of provisions, ordnance, arms, and ammunition was taken. Having by some means again fallen into the hands of the royalist party, it was, about six months after the first siege, taken by storm by the other party. The royalists suffered much by this last defeat, having lost about 600 men and 8 pieces of cannon. It was in 1648 the scene of a bloody and obstinately fought contest between General Lambert, commanding the forces of the parliament, and a body of Scottish troops in retreat after the battle of Ribblesdale, under the duke of Hamilton; the battle, in which 1000 men were slain, terminated in favour of General Lambert, who again, in 1651, met the royalists here under Charles II., and again defeated them with great loss. In 1658, Sir George Booth, who had been returned for Lancashire during the protectorate, but who considered ultimately the designs of Oliver as being by no means favourable to English liberty, here attempted to excite a feeling against the existing order of things, and having raised a considerable body of men, attempted to make a stand against General Lambert at Winnington bridge, near Delamere Forest, but was totally routed, and obliged to retreat toward Warrington, where he was intercepted by the garrison of that place, and great part of his army obliged to surrender. For this and other services Sir George Booth was created baron Delamere of Dunham Massey. Warrington has been usually looked on, in a military point of view, as the key to Lancashire, from the facility afforded in crossing the Mersey by means of the bridge. In 1745, the Liverpool Blues intercepted a part of the insurgent army of Prince Charles Edward by cutting down the bridge, and sent the prisoners to Chester castle.

Description.—The town is situated on the river Mersey, which is crossed at this place by a bridge, which at present consists of wooden arches on stone piers, and was erected in 1812, at the joint expense of the counties of Chester and Lancaster. The former structure was of stone, and was built in 1496 by Thomas, the first earl of Derby, in commemoration of the visit of King Henry VII. to Lathom and Knowsley; before this time the river was crossed by a ford. In 1745, as already mentioned, it was partly taken down, and in 2 years repaired, but speedily became ruinous. The town consists chiefly of four principal streets diverging from the centre, with smaller ones intersecting. The houses are not in general handsome, and the streets were, till lately, almost uniformly narrow and ill paved. The improvement of the town was, however, in 1813, vested in a body of commissioners, who have already done much towards removing those defects; and further improvements are still contemplated. It is well supplied with water by water companies, and has been, since 1822, lighted with gas by a company which obtained an act of incorporation in that year. The works belonging to this company are extensive, the premises in Mersey-street having cost, in erection, about £15,000, which sum was raised on joint stock shares of £20 each. A Florist's Society was commenced in 1817, and was united in 1824 to one of Horticulturists. It possesses a mechanics' institution, established in 1825; and a public subscription library has existed here since 1760, and now contains an extensive and valuable collection of books, which is still increasing. Excellent assembly-rooms were recently erected, and there is a small but handsome theatre which is occasionally opened by companies from the larger towns.

Commerce, &c.—The river Mersey affords a direct communication with Liverpool and the sea, being at spring-tides about 10 feet deep, when vessels of from 70 to 100 tons can easily sail up the river to a quay a little above the town, where there is ample accommodation for the storing of goods. The communication with Manchester is rendered easy and direct by means of the Manchester and Irwell navigation canal, and more lately by a railway with two collateral branches constructed in 1830, connected with that between Liverpool and Manchester, and afterwards continued under the authority of a new act of parliament, across at Newton-in-Mackerfield to the Wigan branch. The rate per ton at which goods are conveyed along this branch varies on different kinds, from three halfpence to sixpence per mille. About one mile west from the town is the commencement of Sankey canal, which extends about twelve miles towards the collieries at St Helen's, being crossed in that length by about 18 moveable bridges. Large quantities of coal, amounting annually to about 100,000 tons, are conveyed along the canal for Liverpool, and the extensive glass-works at Warrington, the rate of tonnage for the whole length being about 1s. With these advantages of communication, and the abundant supply of fuel which the neighbourhood affords, it is not surprising that Warrington should be a place of extensive commerce and manufacture. We accordingly find that long before the commencement of the eighteenth century, it was celebrated for the manufactures of coarse linens and checks. These were, however, speedily superseded by the lucrative manufacture of sail-cloth, which was carried on to such an extent, that it is supposed that half the consumption of that article in the British navy was supplied from this place. This branch has latterly, since the peace in 1815, fallen off considerably, and part of the resources of the town are now employed in cotton-spinning, and in the weaving of muslins, calicoes, velveteens, and similar fabrics. Two halls have been recently erected for the sale of these articles. Many articles of hardware are made here, but the staple manufacture of the place is pin-making, which employs a great number of workmen. In these different manufactories there are employed here and in the vicinity about 20 steam-engines, averaging about 20 horse power each. Here are extensive tanneries and soap manufactories; and the ale of this place is held in great estimation, and large quantities are made both for the consumption of the town and for export. The making of glass bottles, &c., is here carried on to a great extent, chiefly by large companies, of which the bank quay glass company is the chief. Large quantities of this article were formerly sent to the American States, but the Tariff bill of that country has been severely felt by the manufacturers at Warrington, and the manufacture has not, in consequence, prospered so much of late years. Here was formerly an extensive and lucrative fishing station, which, about 70 years ago, let for £400 per annum, it has, however, now declined very much every way; the fish caught here being now not only fewer in number, but also inferior in flavour and size. This may probably be attributed to the noxious discharge from the public works, and other causes connected with the commerce of the place. About 70 stage coaches pass through Warrington daily, which give it as great an appearance of bustle and prosperity as many larger towns. Fairs are held for the sale of cattle, horses, pigs, and sheep, on November 30th, and for woollen and cotton goods on July 18th; each of these continues ten days. Wednesday and Saturday are market days; the former being well attended for the sale of corn, and the latter is for provisions of all kinds. Large quantities of vegetables are then brought in from the vicinity, which is very fertile and well cultivated, having formerly sent potatoes to the Mediterranean, which are, however, now retained for home consumption, owing to the great increase of population. The market-hall is a convenient building, situated in the market-place, and let to different tenants during the fairs, and commonly used as a corn exchange on market days. Till the erection of the present handsome rooms, assemblies were held in a suite over the market-hall. As already mentioned, here are two cloth-halls, the smaller of which is in Buttermarket-street, and the other in the vicinity of the market-place; the latter contains spacious premises, the lower floor being principally in shops, and the upper being used for the sale of cloths. The town-hall was erected in 1820 by public subscription, at an expense of almost £3,000. The lord of the manor holds an annual court-leet, at which constables and other municipal officers are appointed. The magistrates for the county hold quarter sessions here on the first and third Wednesdays in every month.

Living, Charities, &c.—The living is a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Chester, rated at £40, and, in 1829, in patronage of Lord Lifford. The ancient church is a structure built in the time of the Saxons, and ded. to St Elfin; but of this building there are few remains, the site being occupied by the present edifice, which is ded. to St Helen, and is in a mixed style of architecture. The tower, with the piers and arches supporting, and the chancel, are remains of the ancient building, in the decorated style of English architecture; the windows of the chancel are enriched with elegant designs in painted glass. The north transept is in the later style, but is not so beautiful as the older parts of the church. The rest of the church, consisting of the nave and south transept, are still more recent additions. The church contains two ancient sepulchral chapels, one of which contains the tomb and effigies of Sir Thomas Boteler and his lady, surrounded with some curious specimens of carving. The other contains some monuments to the Patten family, but formerly to the Masseys. Here is an excellent piece of sculpture erected to the memory of Thomas Wilson Patten, Esq., who died about 12 or 14 years ago at Naples. There have been recently additions made to this church to the extent of 268 sittings, of which 198 are free, £100 having been granted by the society for enlarging churches towards defraying the expense. Besides the rectory there are two curacies, one which is rated at £17 10s., returned at £106, and, in 1829, in patronage of Thos. Leigh, Esq. The church is ded. to the Holy Trinity, and is a neat building in Sankey-street. The other is a perpetual curacy not in charge, and in the patronage of the rector of Warrington. The church—the foundation-stone of which was laid on the 11th of August, 1829—is ded. to St Paul, and erected by means of a parliamentary grant for that purpose: it is in Bewsey-street. The Baptists, Independents, Society of Friends, Independent and Wesleyan Methodists, those in the late countess of Huntingdon's connexion, Unitarians, and Roman Catholics, have places of worship here. Here is a free school, erected and first endowed by one of the Botelers in 1526. The master is appointed by Lord Lifford, and, under a decree obtained in 1820 from the court of chancery, receives a salary of £300 per annum, also a free house and garden. By the same authority the salary of the usher is fixed at not less than £60, nor more than £100 annually; that of the writing master is from £40 to £60. The master is entitled to an addition on the number of boys exceeding thirty. The school is open to all boys in the parish above the age of seven. Here has also existed since 1677 a blue-coat school, at which 150 boys and 40 girls receive instruction, of which number, 14 of the former and 10 of the latter are clothed. It is partly supported by subscription, but principally by rent of land bequeathed or purchased by benefactions at different periods. Besides these funds, it has a reversionary in two estates, one at Sankey worth about £6000, and left in 1797 by John Watkins, Esq., and the other in the county of Bedford, given in 1685 by Arthur Borron. It is in Winwick-street, where is also a charity school, at which 150 girls are taught the simpler branches of education, and an infant school commenced in 1826, both of which are supported by subscription. Here are many Sunday schools, at which about 3000 children are taught. Here has been established for above 100 years, a society for the relief of the widows and children left by clergymen of the archd. of Chester, which is well supported. Here has been a dispensary since 1810, a new building having been erected at an expense of about £1,030, in 1816, for its use. At this institution about 1000 persons annually receive relief. A lying-in-society was instituted here in 1819, and there are several other charitable institutions within the town. Here were born John Blackburne, Esq., who resided at Oxford hall, about a mile from the town, and who was a very celebrated botanist, having been the first to introduce the culture of the pine-apple into this country: he also made some very interesting and useful experiments on the cultivation of the cotton plant. He died here in 1796, aged 96; also Litherland, inventor of the patent lever watch. This place formerly gave title to the Booth family; and the title having become dormant, it was revived in the Grey family, in which family are the titles of earls of Stamford and Warrington. Distance from London, 184 m. N.W. by N.; from Lancaster, 52 m. S. by E.

WARSELL, a township in the parish of Ripon, W. R. of the co. of York. The Independents have a place of worship here. Distance from Ripley, 5 m. N.W. Pop., in 1821, 86; in 1831, 93.

WARSLOW, a chapelry in the parish of Alstonefield, northern division of the hundred of Totmonslow, co. of Stafford. Living, a perpetual curacy subordinate to, and in patronage of, the vicarage of Alstonefield, in the archd. of Stafford and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, rated at £1 10s., and returned at £32. Church ded. to St John. Here is a school endowed with £20 annual income, having been erected in 1788 by subscription. About 20 children are taught here. Distance from Leek, 6 m. E.N.E. Pop., in 1801, 523; that in 1831, and the A. P., returned with the township of Upper and Lower Elkstone.

WAR SOP, a parish in the Hatfield division of the wapentake of Bassetlaw, co. of Nottingham. It consists of two villages, Church Warsop and Market Warsop. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Nottingham and dio. of York, rated at £22 15s. 2d., and, in 1829, in patronage of J. G. Knight, Esq. Church ded. to St Peter and St Paul. Here is a school founded in 1811 by Thomas Whiteman, with an endowment of £400, producing £15 15s. annually, on which 24 children are taught. This parish is partly within the jurisdiction of the manorial court of Mansfield. The river

Meden passes through the parish. Fairs are held here for cattle and horses on May 21st and November 17th. Distance from Mansfield, 5 m. N.N.E. Pop., in 1801, 944; in 1831, 1213. A. P., £4,473.

WARTER, a parish in Bainton-Beacon division of the wapentake of Harthill, E. R. of the co. of York. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of the E. R. and dio. of York, rated at £4, returned at £37, and, in 1829, in patronage of Lord Muncaster. The church, which is ded. to St James, is a neat edifice, comprising a nave, chancel, and embattled tower at the west end. Here was "a priory of Black canons founded by Geoffrey Fitz Pain, alias Trusbat, A.D. 1132. St James was its tutelar patron. About the time of the dissolution herein were a prior and about ten canons, whose annual income amounted to £143 7s. 8d. per annum, Dugd.; £221 3s. 10d., Speed. The site was granted, 26th and 32d Henry VIII., to Thomas, earl of Rutland."—Tanner's Not. Men. The village is situated in a hollow, surrounded by the wolds, and contains Warter-hall, which is the seat of Lord Muncaster, who is lord of the manor. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here. Distance from Pocklington, 5 m. E. by N. Pop., in 1801, 355; in 1831, 470. A. P., £6,990.

WARTHALL (WARTHOLE, or WARD-HALL), a hamlet in the parish of Plumbland, co. of Cumberland. Distance from Cocker-mouth, 5 m. N. Pop. returned with that of the parish.

WARTHERMASK, or WARDERMASK, a township conjointly with Swinton, partly in the liberty of St Peter of York, E. R., and partly in the wapentake of Hang East, N. R. of the co. of York. Distance from Bedale, 8 m. S.W. by S. Pop. returned with Swinton.

WARTHILL, a parish partly in the liberty of St Peter of York, E. R., and partly in the wapentake of Bulmer, N. R. of the co. of York; the former portion contains the township of Warthill. Living, a discharged vicarage in the peculiar jurisdiction of the dean and chapter of York, rated at £3 1s. 8d., and in patronage of the prebendary of Warthill in York cathedral. Church ded. to St Mary. Distance from York, 5½ m. N.E. by E. Pop. of the township, in 1811, 95; in 1831, 127; of the whole parish, in 1801, 115; in 1831, 162. A. P., £951.

WARTLING, a parish in the hundred of Foxeale, rape of Hastings, co. of Sussex. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Lewes and dio. of Chichester, rated at £16 0s. 2½d., and, in 1829, in patronage of the Rev. J. Cazalet. Church ded. to St Mary Magdalene. Distance from Haylabam, 4½ m. E. by S. Pop., in 1801, 858; in 1831, 948. A. P., £4,143.

WARTNABY, a chapelry and township in the parish of Rothley, hundred of East Goscote, co. of Leicester. Living, a curacy, and in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the vicar of Rothley, rated at £11. Chapel to St Michael. Distance from Melton-

Mowbray, 4½ m. N.W. Pop., in 1801, 77; in 1831, 86. A. P., £916.

WARTOFT, or WAVERTOFT-GRANGE, an extra-parochial hamlet, locally within the lordship of Castle-Donington, in the hundred of West Goscote, co. of Leicester. It consists merely of one farm-house about 130 acres of land.

WARTON, a chapelry and township in the parish of Kirkham, hundred of Amounderness, co.-palatine of Lancaster. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester, not in charge, returned at £95, and in patronage of the vicar of the parish. The chapel is ded. to St Paul, having been consecrated in 1725. Here is a school with an annual income of £100, arising partly from endowments and partly from annual subscriptions, at which about 40 children receive instruction. Distance from Kirkham, 3 m. S.W. by S. Pop., in 1801, 376; in 1831, 531. A. P., £2,901.

WARTON, a parish in the hundred of Lonsdale, co.-palatine of Lancaster. It comprises the townships of Borwick, Carnforth, Hutton, Warton with Lindeth, Yeland-Coyers, and Yeland, Redmayne, with the chapelry of Silverdale. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester, rated at £74 10s. 2½d., returned at £80, and in the patronage of the dean and chapter. Church ded. to the Holy Trinity. Here were, till lately, a free grammar school and hospital, founded and endowed in 1594 by Matthew Hutton, at that time archbishop of York, and afterwards further endowed by Robert Lucas and others. Here was formerly a copper mine, not now worked; and remains of a Roman camp are still discoverable. A canal passes through this place from Lancaster, from which it is distant 8 m. N. by E. Pop. of the township, in 1801, 464; in 1831, 558. A. P., £2,660. Aggregate pop. of the parish, in 1801, 1574; in 1831, 2151. A. P., £12,720. For the pop. of the several townships, &c. see the different articles.

WARTON, a township in the parish of Rothbury, western division of the ward of Coquetdale, co. of Northumberland. Distance from Rothbury, 3 m. W. by N. Pop., in 1801, 66; in 1831, 59.

WARWICK, a parish partly in the ward of Cumberland, comprising the townships of Aglionby and Warwick, and partly in that of Eskdale, including the township of Little Cerry, co. of Cumberland. Living, a perpetual curacy with Wetherall, in the archd. and dio. of Carlisle, not in charge, and in patronage of the dean and chapter of Carlisle. The church is ded. to St Leonard, and is built of stone, in the Norman style, with an east end of a semi-circular form; it appears to have been once much larger. The parish is not only united to Wetherall in ecclesiastical affairs, but also in the management and distribution of the parochial funds. Here is a building for the use of a Sunday school, erected by the late Thomas Parker, Esq. The parish is situated on the river Irthing, which bounds it on the west and also on the south bank of the river Eden, which is here crossed by a bridge of four arches. Here are remains of earth-works, from which it is supposed to have been the station of the sixth cohort of the Nervii, called by the Romans Virosidam. Distance from Carlisle, 5 m. E. by N. Pop. of the township, in 1801, 241; in 1831, 266: of the whole parish, in 1801, 453; in 1831, 686. A. P., £2,894. The returns made for Aglionby and Little Corby, may be found under their several heads.

WARWICK,

A borough and market-town, having separate jurisdiction, locally within the Warwick division of the hundred of Kingston, co. of Warwick. Rous, the historian of the county, considers Warwick to have been a place of considerable size and importance even in the time of the Britons, which opinion is also held by Camden, Dugdale, and other writers on the subject. We are also informed by the same author, that having frequently suffered from the repeated inroads of the Picts, it was rebuilt by Caractacus, on whose defeat and capture in the year 50, the emperor Claudius erected fortresses on the banks of the Avon and Severn, of which Warwick is supposed to have been one. This statement, however, is doubtful, and it is rendered probable by the researches of antiquarians that the nearest Roman station was at Chesterton. Under the Saxon heptarchy this town was with the county included in the kingdom of Mercia, and came into the possession of Warremund, who called it after his own name Warre-wyke; this derivation has, however, been disputed, principally on the information afforded by a coin of Hardicanute, on which it is called Werhica. Warwick suffered much from the invasion of the Danes, and it appears most likely that it was immediately after this rebuilt by Ethelfleda in 913, who also built the most ancient part of the castle. Immediately after the Norman conquest, the importance of this place as a military station seems to have been duly appreciated, for we find it surrounded with walls, a portion of which still remains, and is known under the name of the Wall-dyke. In 1312, Warwick castle was repaired by the celebrated Guy, earl of Warwick, who beheaded here Piers Gaveston, who was the clever but unprincipled favourite of the king, and the object of especial enmity to the great barons who were in opposition to the crown. After various conflicts with the monarch, they succeeded in banishing the favourite from the kingdom; but he having imprudently returned in 1312, the earl of Warwick forcibly seized upon his person, in defiance of an express convention, and bore him in triumph to Warwick castle, where the earls of Lancaster, Hereford, and Arundel, repaired to hold a consultation about their prisoner. His fate was speedily decided. He was dragged to Blacklow-hill, about two miles from Warwick castle, where he was beheaded amidst the scorn and reproach of his implacable and perfidious enemies. On the top of Blacklow-hill there is a rude stone, on which the name of Gaveston, and the date of his execution, are cut in ancient characters. Warwick was visited in 1572 by Queen Elizabeth on her route to Kenilworth castle; the town was also visited by James I., in 1617, when a splendid entertainment was given him in the great hall of the earl of Leicester's hospital, in commemoration of which an inscription was put upon one of the walls of the building. During the parliamentary war, the castle was defended against the king by Robert Greville, Lord Brooke. Lord Brooke having had occasion to repair to London for supply of arms and ammunition, the castle was besieged for about 14 days by the earl of Northampton, but the garrison made a gallant defence till Lord Brooke returned to raise the siege. A large portion of the town was burnt in 1694, and in the course of a few years after was rebuilt, the losses of the inhabitants having been relieved by a national contribution of £110,000, of which £1000 was given by Queen Anne. The town stands in an agreeable situation on the north side of the river Avon, and is built upon a rock of freestone. The surrounding country is very beautiful and richly diversified, and the entrances from the Banbury, Birmingham, and Stratford roads are remarkably picturesque. The streets are regularly built and spacious, the two principal ones running east and west, and being crossed by another of considerable extent, near the centre of the town. The streets are well-paved and lighted with gas, and contain many handsome modern houses. An excellent supply of water is obtained from springs in the neighbourhood, and brought by pipes into the town.—Here are a public library and a news-room, supported by subscription. Assemblies are occasionally held in the town-hall, and during the races, in the county-hall; here is also a small theatre, occasionally opened by the Cheltenham company. Races are held twice a year, in March and September; at the spring meeting the ladies of Leamington give a plate of £50, and at the same time is given the Leamington cup worth £50, with £10 for the second horse; also a cup of the same value given by Bolton King, Esq. At the September meeting the king's plate of one hundred guineas, the town plate of £50, the member's plate of £50, the Warwick cup of £100, and the Guy, Leamington, and other stakes, are run for. The race course is one of the best in the kingdom, and lies on a fine level piece of ground.—Here are scarcely any manufactures; that of worsted is rapidly decreasing, and that of cotton is entirely extinct. Malt is made to some extent; and there are lime, coal, and timber wharfs on the banks of the Warwick and Napton canal, which comes up to the north part of the town. This canal communicates with the Oxford and Birmingham canal, and on it are boats conveying goods and passengers to Birmingham, Liverpool, Manchester, and Wolverhampton daily; and to Oxford and Banbury on Tuesdays and Fridays. Saturday is market-day, when corn and provisions are abundantly supplied. The market-place is an extensive area, containing in the centre a neat market-house constructed of stone, the lower part of which is an open piazza, affording a sheltered area for the use of the market. Fairs are held on January 21st, February 11th and 23d, April 1st, May 13th, June 3d, July 5th, August 12th, September 4th, October 12th, November 8th, and December 16th, for horses, sheep, and cheese. Pop., in 1801, 5592; in 1831, 9105. A. P., £29,455.

Municipal Government.—Warwick received its first charter from Queen Mary in 1554, and is now governed under a charter granted by Charles II. in 1684, and confirmed and extended by William III. The government is vested in a mayor, recorder, deputy-recorder, 12 aldermen, and 12 assistant burgesses, with a town clerk, a sergeant-at-mace, a yeoman sergeant, and subordinate officers. The mayor, late mayor, the recorder, deputy-recorder, and three senior aldermen, have magisterial jurisdiction within the town. The burgesses at large elect the mayor annually on the 29th September, from among the aldermen; the recorder is chosen by the corporation, and holds his office for life; and the deputy-recorder, who also performs the duties of town-clerk, is appointed by the recorder; the aldermen are chosen by the mayor and the rest of the body, and the assistant burgesses are elected by the aldermen. A residence of three years is requisite to qualify to the office of assistant-burgess. The magistrates for the borough hold quarterly courts of session for all offences not capital, and a court of record is held every Wednesday, except during the weeks of Christmas, Easter, and Whitsun, for the recovery of debts under £40, at which the town-clerk presides. Here is a handsome court-house in the Grecian style, in which the borough, sessions, and courts of record are held. It contains a handsome assembly-room, 60 feet long and 27 feet wide. The walls are decorated with fluted Corinthian pilasters, and three large and brilliant chandeliers of cut glass are suspended from the ceiling. Here is also the county-hall, in which are held the assizes and general quarter-sessions of the peace for the county of Warwick. It is an elegant building, constructed of free-stone, in the Corinthian order of Grecian architecture. Close to this building is a mansion for the judge, and on the opposite side is the county-gaol, a remarkably well-arranged building, in which the prisoners can be properly classified. Here is likewise the county bridewell, in which prisoners are kept at hard labour, such as working the flour-mill, heading pins, and raising water by means of an apparatus connected with a tread-mill. Warwick has returned two members to parliament since the 23d of Edward I. The scot and lot payers exercised the franchise till the passing of the reform bill.

Living, &c.—The town contains two parishes, both in the archd. and dio. of Worcester. That of St Mary's is a vicarage, rated at £20, returned at £135, and in patronage of the lord-chancellor. The church—which was formerly collegiate—is a building in a mixed style of architure; the chancel—which is part of the original building—is in the later style of English architecture, and displays much beauty in its details; the nave is spacious and of lofty dimensions, separated from the aisles by ranges of clustered columns, well lighted by clerestory windows. The tower—which rises to the height of 130 feet—is built in successive stages, and the lower part is supported by four pointed arches, beneath which is a spacious passage. At the four angles are lofty and enriched pinnacles, between which are others not so high, and the whole is seen from a great distance and presents a beautiful appearance. The exterior of the whole is in general elaborately finished, but the eastern part, in particular, is of great beauty, being furnished with richly wrought buttresses, and the front on this side is part of the original edifice, uniting in a striking degree grandeur of design with simplicity and elegance of detail. The windows of the aisles and transepts are unfortunately, although of a large size, totally without any claim to beauty. This deplorable mixture of the most elegant specimens of English architecture, with those modern parts which are in the Roman style, arises from the circumstances of great part of the church having been destroyed by fire about 140 years ago, and rebuilt in 1704, under the direction of an artist who had not sufficient taste to understand that, however beautiful each style may be separately, yet that together they can only produce an ill-connected incongruous whole. From the lofty and elegant appearances of the parts, it is, however, by no means so paltry as might have been expected. Among those parts of the original edifice which escaped the conflagration, is the beautiful chapel commonly called the Beauchamp chapel, from its having been erected by Richard Beauchamp, earl of Warwick. The entrance to this chapel is in the south transept of the church, and the building is an elegant specimen of the later style, considered only inferior to Henry Seventh's chapel at Westminster, both in its exterior and interior. The roof is adorned with fan tracery, and is elaborately groined. The altar-piece consists of a basso-relievo in marble, representing the salutation, from the chisel of Collins. Behind the altar is an apartment said to have belonged to John Rous, the founder of the chapel; on the north side is a chantry, and an apartment used before the Reformation as a confessional. Here are two ancient monuments, one of which is erected to the memory of Robert Dudley, earl of Leicester,—it is in the style of the reign of Queen Elizabeth; the other is in gilt brass, in the centre of the chapel, to the memory of John Rous, and contains his effigy recumbent on the tomb, surrounded with numerous figures and shields of armorial bearings. The chapter-house is on the opposite side from the chapel, and is now partly used as a cemetery and partly appropriated to the use of the national school. The living of St Nicholas is a vicarage, rated at £13 6s. 8d., returned at £125, and in patronage of the mayor and other members of the corporation of the town. It is a building in the later style of architecture, the tower having been built in 1740, and the rest of the church about 40 years after. The roof is elegantly groined, and the interior is lighted by three windows on each side, the altar being in a recess at the east end. The Baptists, Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, Society of Friends, and Unitarians, have places of worship here.

Benevolent Institutions.—Here is a free grammar school, situated on the Butts, which was founded by Henry VIII., and endowed with part of the revenues arising from the lands of the confiscated monasteries. It is open to all boys in the town, on payment of an annual fee of 10s. and of £1 11s. 6d. on entrance; the master receives an annual salary of £130, and is appointed by the king. Connected with this school are two exhibitions for £70 per annum each, which were founded by Mr Fulke Weale, and entitle the holders to go to any of the colleges in Oxford. The school has also sometimes, in default or failure of candidates from Combrook, the benefit of two exhibitions for Trinity college, Cambridge, founded by Lady Verney. The school-rooms are in an ancient building, founded by Richard, earl of Warwick, for the use of the dean and canons of the church of St Mary, and consisting of two cloisters, forming, with other parts of the building, a quadrangle. Here is also a charity school, which is held in the ancient chapel of St Peter, at which 39 boys and 36 girls receive instruction in the simpler branches of education, and 40 are completely clothed, and the rest receive each a coat and one pair of shoes per annum. The master's salary is £40, subject to a deduction for the salary of the school-mistress, who teaches the girls sewing. A national school, at which 200 children receive education, is supported by subscription. Here is also a school of industry, conducted on the national system of education, established by the countess of Warwick, and supported by the exertions of the ladies in the town and vicinity. It is situated in Castle-street, in a house left for the purpose by Mr Oaken, a gentleman to whom the different charitable institutions of this place are much indebted. About 40 girls are here taught, and provided with dinner daily, on payment of a moderate quarterly sum; they are instructed in the useful as well as the elementary branches of education, namely, reading, writing, arithmetic, sewing, knitting, &c. The proceeds of the labour of the scholars contributes towards the support of the school. The hospital was founded by Robert, earl of Leicester, who appropriated for that purpose a building formerly used by the ancient guilds of the Holy Trinity and St George, and granted to him at the general dissolution. He endowed it for the use of a master and 12 aged brethren, preferring such as had been wounded in the service of their country. The funds of this institution having increased so as to afford £130 per annum to each of the brethren, an act of parliament was procured for augmenting the master's salary to £400, it having been limited by the will of the original donor to £50 per annum, and at the same time reducing the incomes of the brethren to £80, until, by the accumulation of unappropriated income, 10 additional brethren can be admitted, when the funds are to be equally divided amongst the brethren. The building occupied by the brethren is built in the form of a quadrangle, one side of which contains the great hall, another the master's house, and the two others are occupied by the rest of the brethren, who have separate apartments. The costume of the almsmen is a blue gown, with the far-famed crest of the founder, the bear and rugged staff, on the left shoulder. The master is appointed by the heirs of the founder, and must necessarily be in orders. The patronage of Hampton-in-Arden belongs to the masters and brethren. Divine service is performed by the master daily in the chapel of St James, annexed to and forming part of the hospital. It contains a painting of Christ's ascension, from the pencil of Millar, who was a pupil of Reynolds. The inhabitants partake in the advantages of a charity bequeathed by Sir Thomas White, for the purpose of assisting young tradesmen with a loan of £100, without interest, for nine years. There are in different parts of the town about 40 almshouses, endowed with various sums, and the inmates of which—principally old women—receive quarterly sums, with donations of coats, gowns, and other similar advantages. Large sums are at the disposal of the corporation for charitable purposes.

The Castle.—The castle of Warwick, which is on the southern side of the town, is well worthy of notice as one of the most complete specimens of those immense monuments of feudal grandeur which formerly existed in such abundance, but of which the greater number has fallen into ruins. It includes an area of about three acres, and the space within the moat is about five acres, and is equally remarkable for its strength, beauty, and magnificence. A winding road leads from the outer lodge to a gateway flanked with two towers, and in which was formerly a portcullis. This gate admits into the inner court, in which there are several octangular towers, one of which is called Cæsar's—a common appellation of some commanding part of the fortress in many castles of remote antiquity. Another, and the more important of these towers, is called Guy's. This building is perhaps the most commanding feature of Warwick castle. It is 148 feet in height. From whatever point it is viewed its proportions are truly majestic. On the north-eastern side are two low embattled towers, in which bears were formerly kept for the purpose of being baited.—The state-rooms, which are exhibited at Warwick castle, contain many objects deserving attention. Some of the pictures are of the first order of excellence, particularly several portraits by Vandyke. In a greenhouse, delightfully situated in the grounds surrounding the castle, is one of the finest and most perfect remains of antiquity, a Grecian vase of white marble, dug up from the ruins of the emperor Adrian's palace at Tivoli, and sent to England by Sir William Hamilton, in 1774. It is probably one of the most entire, and, to a certain extent, the most beautiful specimen of ancient sculpture which this country possesses. At the western extremity is the lofty keep, which presents a truly majestic and noble appearance from this side of the castle; it was erected, as already mentioned, by the daughter of Alfred the Great, and is now approached by a winding path of great beauty, the grounds having been laid out in shrubberies. The side towards the Avon is by no means the most favourable point of view, consisting entirely of one unbroken line of masonry, only preserved from monotony by the number of windows. On this side are the remains of an ancient bridge.

The following account of the castle is extracted from Mr Grosse's Antiquities:—"The era of its first erection is doubtful; neither are its founders better ascertained, some attributing it to the Romans, others to Cymbeline the British king; and Dugdale, though he speaks but doubtfully from the authority of Rous, ascribes it to Ethelfleda, daughter of King Alfred, who, according to that monk, caused the donjon to be made, which was a strong tower raised on a high artificial mount of earth near the river. 'It appears,' says the author of the history of the house of Greville, 'by domesday book, that the castle belonged to the crown in the reign of King Edward the Confessor, as a special stronghold for the defence of the midland parts of the kingdom, and that Turkill was governor thereof for the king.' Some remains of this ancient work were visible in Dugdale's time: the mount is still to be seen on the west side of the present castle. At the conquest, William employed Turkill de Warwick to enlarge and fortify it, for which purpose several houses belonging to the monks of Coventry were destroyed; but on its completion he intrusted it to the custody of Henry de Newburgh, whom he created earl of Warwick. This castle, in the time of Henry III., was deemed of such importance, that the king's precept was sent to the archbishop of York and William de Cantalupe, for requiring good security of Margery, sister and heir of Thomas, earl of Warwick, that she should not take to husband any person whatsoever, in whom the king could not repose trust as in his own self; the chief reason alleged was, the strength of this castle, and its vicinity to the marches. In the 40th year of this reign, the earl siding with the king against the barons, this place was surprised by John Gifford, governor of Kenilworth castle, who demolished the walls from tower to tower, and carried him and his countess prisoners to Kenilworth. In the time of Edward III. it was granted during the minority of the earl to Roger Mortimer of Wigmore, and in the 45th of that king, Thomas, earl of Warwick, rebuilt the walls of the castle, adding strong gates, and fortifying the gateways with embattled towers. In the reign of Richard II., Thomas Beauchamp, earl of Warwick, erected the remarkable tower called Guy's tower, the cost of which was £395 6s. Its walls are ten feet thick. George Plantagenet, created earl of Warwick by his brother, Edward IV., resided here, and began to strengthen and beautify this castle." The castle was still in the hands of the crown, the different earls being merely constables in the king's name. It was granted in fee by James I. to Sir Foulke Greville, whose descendant, Francis, earl of Brooke, was created by Geo. II., earl of Warwick castle, and in whose family it still continues. "In the civil war it was made a garrison for the parliament by the Lord Brooke. The prisoners taken at Edgehill were confined here. Robert, earl of Brooke, in the time of Charles II., much embellished the whole building, and particularly fitted up the state apartments. In the precinct of this castle was a church ded. to All Saints, and, according to Rous, founded by the Britons. This church had divers customs and privileges, and was, in 1125, united by Simon, bishop of Worcester, to the collegiate church of St Mary of Warwick, founded by Roger, earl of Warwick." Here are kept a large two-handed sword, with a helmet and other pieces of armour, said to have belonged to Guy of Warwick.

Monastic Establishments, &c.—On the road to Kenilworth is a rock called Guy's Cliff, in which is a cave said to have been the retreat of the celebrated Guy, earl of Warwick, for some years before his death. He is said to have lived here in the disguise of a hermit, unknown to his countess, who resided in the castle which he daily visited. Near the cave is a range of cells with rudely arched cloisters hewn in the rock, called after the countess, Phillis' cloisters. Close to this are two ancient stone-basins into which a stream of clear water constantly flows, called Guy's well. On the cliff are the remains of a chapel ded. to St Margaret, founded by Richard de Beauchamp, earl of Warwick. It is in the later style of English architecture, with a richly groined roof and a beautiful porch, and containing a colossal statue of Guy of Warwick in armour, which has been considerably mutilated. On this hill is a handsome residence built by the late Mr Greatheed, with a handsome avenue of fir trees in front. The following account of the monastic establishments of Warwick, is given by Bishop Tanner in his Notitia:—"In the north-west part of this town was an abbey in the Saxon times, which was destroyed, A. D. 1016, by Canutus the Dane. Here was also anciently a house of nuns, where is now St Nicholas' church yard, which is said to have been burnt to the ground by the Danes, A. D. 1016. On the north side of this town, where once stood a parochial church of St Helen, Henry de Newburgh, earl of Warwick, began, and his son, Earl Roger, finished, temp. Henry I., an hospital or priory of canons regular, in honour of the Holy Sepulchre, and of that order. About the time of the general dissolution herein were a prior and two or three poor religious, who were endowed with £41 10s. 2d. per annum, Dugd.; £49 13s. 6d., Speed. The site of this monastery was granted, 38th Hen. VIII., to Thomas Hawkyne, alias Fysher. Roger, earl of Warwick, is said to have founded here the house of templars beyond the bridge, temp. R. Hen. I., or R. Steph., which was certified, 9th Edward II., to be of the yearly value of £14 6s. 8d.; and after the dissolution of that order, became part of the preceptory of Balsall in this county belonging to the knights hospitallers. If what John Rous reports be true concerning St Dubricius fixing an episcopal seat here in the church of All Saints, within the precincts of the castle about the latter end of the sixth century, before he went to Landaff, this was the most ancient foundation in this county. It is pretty certain that before the conquest there were great privileges belonging to this church of All Saints, and therein were secular priests or canons, who were, after the year 1125, united to the college of St Mary in this town, the castle rendering their old church and habitation very inconvenient. The church of our lady in this town seemed to be more than parochial, temp. Will. Conq., because it was endowed with a hide of land in Miton at the time of making the Domesday-book. Henry de Newburgh, the first earl of Warwick of the Norman line, gave several tithes and lands to it for prebends, with design to make it collegiate, and to unite the church of All Saints in Castle to it; but dying before he could complete it, his son, Earl Roger, after the year 1123, finished it, and established therein a dean and secular canons. It was increased in revenues and buildings by the munificence of several earls of Warwick, among which the beautiful chapel of our lady on the south side of the choir, founded according to the will of Richard Beauchamp, earl of Warwick, highly deserves notice. About the time of the dissolution here were a dean, five prebendaries or canons, ten priests vicars, and six choristers, who had possessions to the value of £247 18s. ob. per annum, Dugd. and Speed; £334 2s. 8d. ob., according to a MSS. in the hands of Sir Simon Archer. The site of this college was granted, 37th Hen. VIII., to the burgesses of Warwick. 'In the north suburb is a chapel of St Michael, where sometime was a college having a master and confratres.' This was the hospital of St Michael at the lower end of Saltford-street, founded by Roger, earl of Warwick, in the latter end of the reign of King Hen. I., or beginning of that of King Stephen, for a master or warden, and several leprous brethren, whose revenues were valued, 26th Hen. VIII., at £12 5s. 2d. per annum in the whole, and clearly at £10 1s. 10d. But by another survey made 37th Hen. VIII., they were certified to be worth £10 19s. 10d. over and above all reprises. This hospital is still kept up for eight poor women. Here were also a college ded. to St James, an hospital ded. to St John the Baptist, and another ded. to St Thomas, and houses of Black and White friars." Distance from London, 90 m. N.W.
